The contents of this volume are extracted from a larger work, Vol. II, of the Archæological Survey series of Southern India. It is thought that the separate publication of this slight historical sketch may be of use to many students of history who would not care to burden themselves with a larger work, much of which is taken up with lists of Inscriptions and Chronological Tables intended for the use of those practically engaged in making the bricks out of which the complete historical structure will hereafter be built.

This sketch of the Dynasties is, of course, not intended as a complete history. The subject of South Indian History is as yet in its infancy, and it is only because it is felt very strongly that a beginning must be made in some shape or another that this volume makes its appearance. Armed with this, readers will, it is hoped, feel themselves on fairly sure ground when they seek for information regarding some kingdom or sovereign of the peninsula, and little by little we shall advance in our knowledge.

Some of the principal families, not royal, who can boast of antiquity have been included in this list, since all information of that kind helps forward our knowledge of the march of events.

The arrangement is alphabetical, to assist reference.

R. SEWELL.

GENERAL HISTORICAL SKETCH.

In the earliest days of which we have any knowledge as to the sovereignties ruling the continent of India, it appears that the great Maurya dynasty held the north, while the south was divided amongst the Pandiyans of Madura, who governed the extreme south, the Cholas, who held the country to their north and east, and the Cheras (Keralas), who ruled over the tracts to their north and west. This was in the fourth century B.C. I say "it appears" because, although we are certain of the Mauryas (probably B.C. 325-188) and the Pandiyans as existent in the time of Megasthenes (B.C. 302), we have only the fact of the Cholas and Keralas (or Cheras) being mentioned in the inscriptions of Asoka (B.C. 250) to verify their existence at that still earlier period. But tradition mentions no earlier kingdoms than those of Pandiya, Chola, and Chera in the south of India, and always speaks of them as contemporary. As we are certain of the Pandiyan, therefore, in B.C. 302, we may safely place the Cholas and Cheras as far back as that date. The Keralas appear to have occupied the whole Western Coast under the ghats, and it is probable that the Eastern Coast was also inhabited almost throughout its entire length; but there is no evidence of any kingdom having been in existence throughout the Dakhan, and it is quite possible that almost the whole of its entire area was waste (the Dandakaranya 1) or inhabited only by a few half-wild tribes under their own chiefs, such as those so often mentioned in the Purdnas. It is necessary for students of history to remember that very large areas now cultivated and populated were absolutely waste-mere barren tracts of rock, forest, and wild plains-till comparatively modern times, and this seems especially to have been the case with the Dakhan country.2 It must not be forgotten, however, that the earliest Buddhist legends speak of the kingdom of Kalinga as then in existence.

At some period subsequent to that of Aśoka, the Pallavas3 appear to have grown into importance on the Eastern Coast, and they gradually increased in power till they constituted themselves a great kingdom, with extensive foreign trade, and proved a source of danger to the Cholas and their other neighbours. They appear to have held the entire Eastern Coast from Conjeeveram to the borders of Orissa. At present there is no evidence as to when they arose from obscurity into the dignity of a kingdom, but they seem to have been one of the principal southern powers when the first Chalukyas immigrated from Northern India about the fifth century A.D.

To the Mauryas in the north succeeded the Sanga dynasty (B.C. 188-76) and this was followed by the short Kanva dynasty (B.C. 76-31). The last of these kings being murdered, the Andhra or Andhrabritya dynasty succeeded, and ruled from B.C. 31 to A.D. 436. (?) They were Buddhists, and it was by them that the magnificent marble stupa at Amaravati was erected. About this period, i.e., the fifth century A.D., began to grow into importance the Chalukyan sovereignty of the Western Dakhan, and it is in connection with the early Chalukyas that we hear of the Nalas (probably a Western Coast tribe), the Mauryas (possibly descendants of the earlier Mauryas) who inhabited part of the Konkana, the Sendrakas, Matangas (apparently a barbarous tribe, perhaps aboriginal), the Katachehuris, the

See Mr. Foulkes' article on the "Civilization of the Dakhan down to the sixth century B.C." (Ind. Ant. VIII, 1—10.)
 According to the Ramagana, Bk. IV, Ch. 41, the races inhabiting the country south of the Tungabhadra where the Mekhalas, Utkalas, Dasarnas, Vidarbhas, Rishikas, Mahisakas, Matsyas, Kalikas, Andhrae, Pundras, Cholas, Pandyas, and Keralas.
 Mr. Lawis Rice thinks that a dynasty of the Mahavali-kula reigned over the sastern coast of the peninsula prior to the rise of the Pallavas, and that they gave their name to Mahavalipuram, or the "Seven Pagodas." (Ind. Ant. X, 36.)
 Mr. Floet's Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, p. 10, and note. Their descendants (?) were called Kajachuris.

Gangas of Maisur, and the Alupas or Aluvas, a tribe or dynasty apparently living to the south or southwest of the present Bombay Presidency. Early Chalukyan grants mention a number of other tribes, such as the Latas (of Latadesa, in the north of Bombay), Malayas (Malwa), Gurjaras (of Gujarat), &c.
The Chalukyas divided into two branches in the beginning of the seventh century, an eastern branch conquering the Pallava kings of the Vengi country, or truet between the Krishna and Godavari rivers, and settling in that locality which they governed till A.D. 1023, the western remaining in their original home in the Western Dakhan.

The Chinese pilgrim Hiwen-Thsang, who visited India A.D. 629 to 645, gives a graphic account of the state of the country in his time.

The Kadambas now began to grow into importance, and they fought with and defeated the Pallavas of Kanchi, and were perpetually at feud with the Chalukyas and their other neighbours. Their territory was in the South-west Dakhan and North Maisur. About the same period we find the Rashtrakūtas giving great trouble to the Chalukyas. It is as yet uncertain whether these Rashtrakūtas were "an Aryan Kshatriya, i.e., Rajput, race which immigrated into the Dekkan from the north like the Chalukyas, or a Dravidian family which was received into the Aryan community after the conquest of the Dekkan"-(Dr. Bühler). The wars with the Rashtrakutas seem to have resulted in the complete downfall for two centuries (A.D. 757-8 to 973-4) of the Western Chalukyas and the consequent accretion of great power to the Rashtrakūtas. The latter do not appear, however, to have attempted any conquests in the south. They were completely overthrown by the Western Chālukvas in A.D. 973-4, when the latter once more rose to great eminence. The overthrow of the Rashtrakūtas, too, enabled the Ratta Mahāmandaleścaras to assert themselves, and their dynasty lasted till about A.D. 1253. About the same period we find the Silaharas and Sindas rising into importance, and, like the Raltas, establishing independent dynasties which lasted for several centuries. The Silaharas were overthrown by the Yadavas of Devagiri about A.D. 1220, and the Sindas cease to be heard of about A.D. 1182 - 3,

Little is known of the history of Southern India for two or three centuries immediately preceding the sudden rise of the Cholas to great power,2 which took place in the middle of the eleventh century. At the beginning of that century the Eastern Chalukyas held all the country along the Eastern Coast from the borders of Orissa as far south as the borders of the Pallava country. The Pallava kingdom was a powerful one, possessing the coast from its junction with the Chalukyas down to the northern border of the Chola territories, i.e., just south of Kanchi. The Cholas remained within their own borders and the Pandiyans in theirs, while the Kongu kings, who governed (apparently) the old Chera country east of the Malayalam tracts along the coast, although they were still independent and powerful, were beginning to feel the effect of the attacks of the little kingdom of the Hoysala Ballalas, then rising into power and destined to subvert many of the surrounding monarchies.

In A.D. 1023, by an intermarriage between the two dynasties, the Chola sovereign acquired possession of the whole of the Eastern Chalukyan dominions. This was followed, apparently at the beginning of the reign of his successor, Rajendra Kulottunga Chola (1064-1113), by the complete subversion of the Pallavas by the Cholas, and the annexation to the latter kingdom of their possessions. Rajendra also conquered the Pandiyans, and established a short dynasty of "Chola-Pandiyan" kings at Madura. A little later the Hoysala Ballalas entirely overthrew the Kongu kings and seized their territories, so that the whole of the south of India passed at that time through a period of great political disturbance, which resulted in the Cholas obtaining almost universal sovereignty for a short period, checked, however, by the power of the Hoysala Ballalas above the ghats in Maisur.

This latter power was increased in importance by its conquest of the Kādambas<sup>8</sup> and Kālachuris to its immediate north about the beginning of the thirteenth century, and by the downfall of the great Western Châlukyan dynasty about A.D. 1184, which was caused partly by its wars with the Kādambas and partly by the rise of the Ballalas. A little later the Cholas lost their northern possessions, which were seized by the Ganapatis of Orangal.

We now find ourselves in the thirteenth century, the three great southern powers being the Cholas and Pandiyans-both seemingly losing strength-and the Hoysala Ballalas, rapidly growing in power.

It seems to be now certain that the sovereigns of this dynasty were originally called Chainkyas, the adjectival form Chalukya being adopted by the later representatives of the family.

We gather from the Singlatese chronicles that the Cholas and Pandiyans were constantly at fend with Ceylon, and that the Tamils emigrated in large numbers into Ceylon.

As with the Choladyae and Chiladyae, the earlier and later dynastics of this kingdom seem to have been known respectively. as Kedambas and Kedambas- (Mr. Fleet).

What might have occurred it is needless to enquire, though imagination readily depicts the impetuous Ballalas sweeping down from the ghats and succeeding in subverting the ancient dynasties of the plains; but a new power now appears on the scene, which was destined to acquire universal dominion in course of time—the power of the Musalmans.

Delhi had been captured by the Ghazni Ghörians in 1193, and a dynasty established there which lasted till A.D. 1288. The Khiljis succeeded (1288–1321), and 'Alau-d-din Khilji despatched the first Muhammadan expedition into the Dakhan in A.D. 1306. Four years later the Musalman armies under Malik Kafur swept like a torrent over the peninsula.

Devagiri and Orangal were both reduced to subjection, the capital of the Hoysala Ballalas was taken and sacked, and the kingdoms both of the Cholas and Pandiyans were overthrown. Anarchy followed over the whole south—Musalman governors, representatives of the old royal families, and local chiefs being apparently engaged for years in violent internecine struggles for supremacy. The Ballalas disappeared from the scene, and the kingdoms of Devagiri and Orangal were subverted. A slight check was given to the spread of the Muhammadan arms when a confederation of Hindu chiefs, led by the gallant young Ganapati Raja, withstood and defeated a large Muhammadan army; and the aspect of affairs was altered by the revolt of the Dakhani Musalmans against their sovereign in A.D. 1347, which resulted in the establishment of the Bahmani kingdom of the Dakhan. But the whole of Southern India was convulsed by this sudden aggression of the Muhammadans, and all the old kingdoms fell to pieces.

This period, then, about the year A.D. 1310, is to be noted as the second great landmark in South Indian history, the first being about the period 1023-1070, when the Cholas became almost supreme over the south.

While the Bahmani rebels were consolidating their kingdom in the Dakhan, another great power was being formed south of the Krishna. This was the kingdom of Vijayanagar. Established on the ruins of the Hoysala Ballalas and the other Hindu sovereignties, it speedily rose to a height of power such as no southern kingdom had yet aspired to, and it held the Muhammadans in check for two centuries. From 1336 till 1564 A.D. we have merely to consider, roughly speaking, two great powers—that of the Musalmans north of the Krishna and that of Vijayanagar to the south.

The Bahmani kingdom fell to pieces at the close of the fifteenth century, being succeeded by five separate kingdoms founded by rival Musalman leaders. Their jealousies aided the Vijayanagar sovereigns in their acquisition of power. In 1487 Narasinha of Vijayanagar completely subverted the Pandiyan country, Chola having fallen long before, and by the close of the fifteenth century the power of Vijayanagar was acknowledged as paramount through the entire peninsula. Small principalities existed, such as that of Maisur, the Reddi chieftainship of Kondavidu south of the Krishna (which lasted from 1328 till 1427), and the always independent principality of Travancore, but Vijayanagar was supreme. At the beginning of the sixteenth century Krishnadeva Raya of Vijayanagar further extended the power of his house by the reduction of refractory chiefs far and wide, till his dynasty arose in his day to its greatest height of glory.

In 1564 (the third landmark) all this collapsed. The Muhammadan sovereigns of the Dakhan combined, and in one grand effort swept over Vijayanagar, sacked the capital, put to death the powerful chief who had ruled over the destinies of the empire, and for ever crushed out all semblance of independent Hindu power from the south of India. Even the very family that governed Vijayanagar divided, so that it becomes almost impossible to trace their history, and for a second time the whole of the peninsula was thrown into confusion.

Naturally the minor chiefs seized this opportunity for throwing off all fealty to their sovereign, and throughout the peninsula arose a large number of petty Polegars and small chieftains, whose quarrels and wars and struggles for supremacy kept the whole country in confusion for two-and-a-half centuries. The only chiefs that attained to real power were the Madura Nayakkas, formerly viceroys of Vijayanagar, who speedily became independent and reduced to subjection almost the whole of the old Pandiyan kingdom, their compatriots, the Nayakkas of Tanjore, holding sway over Choludeša. The Rajas of Maisur, too, became independent, and established a kingdom, though not a very powerful one.

Over all this distracted country the Muhammadaus gradually pressed downwards, securing the dominion of the countries south of the Tungabhadra, and eastwards to the sea, and encroaching southwards till they had reached the southern confines of the Telugu country by the middle of the seventeenth century, and by the beginning of the eighteenth were in power far south. The Mahrattas had established themselves in Tanjore in 1674 and remained there till the English supremacy. In 1736 the Musalmans obtained possession of Madura.

The English, settled at Madras since 1639, now began to acquire more and more territory and power, and in the course of the century had conquered almost the whole of the south of India, the defeat of the Maisur Musalmans under Tipa Sultan in 1799 finally laying the peninsula at their feet.

THE ALUPAS.

(Also called Aluxas. See Mr. Fleet's Dynastics of the Kanarese Districts, p. 14.)

They are mentioned in a Maisur inscription on copper, known to many readers of scientific literature as "The Merkara Plates." The age of this document is at present disputed. In a grant of A.D. 694 (S.S. 616) the "Aluvas" are mentioned. The "Alupas" are spoken of in a Kadamba inscription of A.D. 1169-70 (Kaliyuga 4270) and in the Vikramānkadeeacharita of Bilhana. Mr. Fleet locates them somewhere in the west or north-west of the Madras Presidency.

THE ANDHRA DYNASTY.

The earliest kings of whom we have any trace who ruled the north of this Presidency are the Andhras. The great Maurya dynasty of the north were, according to the Puranas, succeeded by kings of the Sanga family, and these again by the Kanvas. The last Kanva, Susarman or Sisuman, was murdered by his minister Sudraka or Sipraka, who seized the throne and founded a dynasty which was called after the name of his tribe, the Andhras. These are the Andaræ of the Greek geographers.*

Three dynasties successively ruled over their widely extended territories. These were the Andhras Proper, the Andhra-jatikas, or "relatives of the Andhras," and the Andhra-bhrityas, or "servants of the Andhras."

The whole of the north of the Madras Presidency down, at least, to the Krishna river, and probably considerably to the south of it, belonged to them, and many of their leaden coins are found in the tracts near the great rivers. They were Buddhists in religion. About the beginning of the Christian era the Andhras were exceedingly powerful, possessing, according to Pliny, very large armies. They held the whole of Kalinga. In the IXth Volume of the Asiatic Researches, pp. 101-116, will be found an essay on the Andhras by Wilford, from which I extract the following comparative table of kings of the dynasty, taken from the several Puranas. I have corrected the spelling, and in the case of the list from the Vishnu Purana have added in italies notes by Mr. Edward Thomas. The list in the Mateya Purana contains twentynine names.

In J.B.B.R.A.S., XIII, 303, will be found a paper by Dr. Codrington and Bhagvanlal Indraji Pandit on some Andhrabhritya coins. They give the names of Valivaya, son of Vasatī (Vasithī),— Sivala, son of Madhari, -and Vidivaya, son of Gotami. In connection with this subject may be noted the succession of the predecessors of the Andhras mentioned above, as it seems certain that the sovereigns of those dynasties must have ruled over the northern portion of the Madras Presidency; though as yet, with the exception of the existence of the Edict of Asoka at Jaugada in Ganjam, I know of no remaining trace of their presence. These tables are taken from Mr. Fergusson's Indian and Eastern Architecture, p. 716.

THE CHALUKYAS.

The kingdom of the Chalukyas I was at one time widely extended, and for six centuries, from the sixth to the twelfth, they maintained a sovereignty, which, it sometimes merely nominal, was at others extremely powerful. We first hear of them in the Dakhan in the sixth century, the third sovereign of the family ascending the throne in A.D. 566. Inscriptions of the dynasty are numerous, and those of the later sovereigns during the decay of the kingdom insert, in the genealogical portion of the document, a mythical series of kings, by which the descent of the family is traced, in the Lunar Race, through a succession of 59 sovereigns ruling in Ayodhya, to one Vijayaditya, who is said to have journeyed south-wards bent on conquest, but to have lost his life in battle. His widow fled, took refuge in the house of a Brahman, and there gave birth to a posthumous son—Vishnuvardhana. Vishnuvardhana is said to have acquired sovereignty and to have made extensive conquests, strengthening his authority by an alliance with the Pallava king of Kanchi, whose daughter he married. His son was Vijayaditya, and the latter's son was Pulikesi Vallabha. The old inscription at Aihole, published by Mr. Fleet in the Indian Antiquary (V, 67) names Pulikeśi's father Ranaraga, and his grandfather, Jayasimha Vallabha. Mr. Fleet's estimate of this early history is that it is "a mere farrage of vague tradition and Puranik myths, of no authority, based on the undoubted facts that the Chalukyas did come originally from the north and did find the Pallavas in possession of some of the territories afterwards acquired by themselves, and on a tradition of the later Kadambas that the founder of their family was named Trilochana or Trinetra."

Pulikesi's grandsons separated, and became the ancestors respectively of the Western and Eastern Chalukyas; the elder remaining in the Western Dakhan, while the younger, Kubja Vishnuvardhana, won for himself by the sword the sovereignty of the Eastern Coast by his conquest of the Salankayana kings of Vengī (Pallavas). This conquest was very important, not only because of its political results, but because it was a triumph of the Brahmanical religion over Buddhism. The Vengi kings were Buddhists, and they seem to have succeeded the Buddhist Andhra-bhrityas on the Krishna river, while the Chalukyas were Vaishnavas.

The following tables are taken mostly from Dr. Burnell's South Indian Palwography, page 18,2 and Mr. Fleet's Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, p. 18. The earliest sovereigns are called "Chalukyas." After the division between Satyaśraya I and Kubja Vishnuvardhana the dynasties are respectively known as those of the "Western Chalukyas" and "Eastern Chalukyas,"—and the dynasty which commenced with Taila, or Tailapa, I called themselves "Chalukyas." Mr. Fleet has largely added to our knowledge since Dr. Burnell wrote, but I have retained some of that author's remarks.

"This is nothing but a mistake. Kalyana is nowhere mentioned in the earlier Chalukyan inscriptions; and, even if it existed as a city at that time, it was certainly not a Chalukya capital. The earliest mention of it that I have obtained is in a stone-tablet inscription of the Western Chalukya king Tmilokyamaila or Someswam I. It is dated Sake 975 (A.D. 1063-4). . . . . "

* See Professor Dowson's Paper in J.R.A.S., New Series, I, 247 (1865).

* The Kaira grant (Ind. Ast. VII. 251).

'At this point Dr. Burnell interpolates the following note:—"So far the flourishing older dynasty of the Chalukyas, which, after Vikramaditya II, appears to have been for a time almost overthrown by feudatories such as the Rashtrakula, Kalabhurya, and Yadava chiefs, and the history of this kingdom is, thus, very obscure for the eighth and ninth centuries. With Tailapa, the restorer of the Chalukya power in the later dynasty, all once more becomes telerably certain, especially as regards the dates of the reigns. A very poetical account of the first sovereigns of this line is given in Bilhana's Fibrandakadesucharters; it is often contradicted in details by the Chola inscriptions."

Pulikesi Vallabha is said in an inscription at Aihole (Ind. Ant. IV, 205) to have reduced Banavasi to subjection. Mr. Fleet thinks that up to that time Banavasi was the capital of an early branch of the Kadambas. Pulikeši also seems to have conquered Bādāmi ("Vātāpi," which Mr. Fleet has satisfactorily identified with Badami.-Ind. Ant., V, 68, etc.)

Kirttivarua I is, in the last inscription mentioned, called "night of death to the Nalas, the Mauryas, and Kadambas." He claims to have entirely subverted the Kadambas.

His younger brother, Mangalisa, is stated, in the same inscription, to have conquered the "Katachchuris," whom Mr. Fleet identifies with the Kalachuris. He lost his life in an attempt to secure the kingdom for his own son. He conquered Revatidvipa, the Matangas, and Kalachuris, part of the Konkanas, and a prince named Buddha, son of Sankaragana.

Satyaśraya was one of the most powerful princes of the dynasty. In later years poets were fond of styling the kings of this race and their descendants, "Princes of the House of Satyaśraya." His greatest achievement was his victory over Harshavardhana, king of Kanoj. He conquered a sovereign from the north named Govinda, whom Mr. Fleet takes to be one of the Rashtrakutas. He claims, in various inscriptions, to have subdued the Mauryas of the Konkana, the "Latas, Malavas, and Gurjaras." He reduced the fortress of "Pishtapura," acquired the sovereignty of Maharashtraka, terrified the "Kalingas and Kosalas," drove the Pallavas behind the walls of Kanchipura, and prepared to conquer the Cholas with a large army. Too much trust must not be placed in the poetry of the inscriptions, but it is abundantly clear from other sources that Satyaśraya was a great conqueror. Hiwen-Thsang gives an interesting account of his kingdom, the manners and customs of the time, and the grandeur of the sovereign. Mr. Fergusson (J.R.A.S. XI, 155) points out that presents and letters were interchanged between him and Khosru II, contemporary king of Persia.

Mr. Rice has an inscription (Mysore Inscriptions, p. 298) mentioning Ambera, daughter of Satya-

The Chalukyan supremacy, after the death of Satyaśraya, was interrupted, either by a confederacy of three kings over whom the Pallava lord of Kanchi claimed supremacy, or by three Pallava kings or viceroys in alliance (it is not yet certain which?), but Vikramaditya I defeated them and ascended the throne of his fathers. He suffered a reverse at the hands of the Pallavas, but afterwards crushed them and seized Kañchi, their capital. One of the inscriptions mentions that Devasakti, king of the Sendrakas, was his vassal.

Vinayaditya claims to have conquered the "Pallavas, whose kingdom consisted of three dominions" at "the command of his father," (Indian Antiquary, VI, 85, Mr. Flect). It seems not improbable that the Pallava confederacy which had checked the power of the Chalukyas was overthrown by Vinayaditya at the head of his father's armies, and that after Vinayaditya had acquired the throne of his father, he made war on and crushed the Pallavas, seizing their capital city. Vinayaditya seems to have possessed almost the whole of the Dakhan country, and to have extended his conquests southwards. He claims to have conquered the Kalambhras (?), the Keralas, Haihayas, Vilas, Malayas, Cholas, Pandiyans and others; and though a great deal of this may be vain boasting, he seems to have been a very powerful sovereign.

<sup>5</sup> The evidence as to this is summarised by Mr. Fleet in Ind. Ast. X, 133—135, in reply to an assertion by Mr. Rice that the evidence as to any such confederation is insufficient.

His son Vijayaditya boasts of conquests, but we do not hear much of him. His reign appears to have been peaceful.

Vikramaditya II claims to have conquered and slain the king of the Pallavas, and again to have victoriously entered Kanchi. In other inscriptions he boasts of having conquered Kanchi, or the king of Kanchi, three times.

Kırttivarma II claims another victory over the Pallavas.

But the power collapsed shortly afterwards, the feudatories revolting and the short-lived kingdom being overwhelmed by successful revolts and conquests by neighbouring powers.

With Tails II, who " acquired the earth, which had fallen into the hands of the Rattas," the Western Chālukya kingdom again revived after a blank of two centuries. The territories governed by the new dynasty were greatly reduced in size, and appear to have extended no further than the limits of the Dakhan Proper.

Jayasimha III claims to have overthrown a confederacy of Malavas, and to have warred against the Cheras and Cholas.

Somesvaradeva I, or Ahava Malla II, appears to have driven back the Cholas, and to have been again defeated by the great Chola king, Kulettunga L. In his reign the Kadambas and other neighbouring families began to assume independence. He married three wives, Bachaladevi, Chandalakabbe or Chandrikadevi, and Mailaladevi.

Somesvara II would appear to have checked the Kadambas, part of whose territories was acquired and held by his brother Vikramaditya VI.

Vikramaditya VI re-established the Saka Era (Mr. Fleet in Ind. Ant. IV, 208, V, 175). He gave his daughter in marriage to a Kadamba prince, and married a Chola princess. He fought many battles, and seems to have been engaged in perpetual struggles to secure his sovereignty against members of his own family no less than against the armies of hostile sovereigns.4 He was, however, very powerful, and a large number of inscriptions testify to the extent of his territories.

From this period the kingdom began to full to pieces and nothing remarkable seems to have been achieved by the later sovereigns, though Somesvara IV re-established for a few years the power which had been rudely shaken by Bijjala the Kalachuri. The power of the Kalachuri and Ganapati kings and the rise of the Hoysala Ballala dynasty of Maisur sealed the fate of the Western Chalukyas, and nothing is heard of them after 1189 A.D.5

EASTERN CHĀLUKYAS,

It has been already stated (p. 148) that the two great Chalukyan brothers, Satyaśrava and Kubia Vishnuvardhana, separated and established two separate dynasties. The family of the former are called the Western Chalukyas. Kubja Vishnuvardhana, marching to the Eastern Coast, conquered and dethroned the Salankayana sovereign of Vengi and established a dynasty which, gradually extending its conquests to the borders of Orissa and fixing its capital at Rajahmundry, ruled Kalinga for four

The genealogy is as follows. The table is mainly taken from Dr. Burnell's South-Indian Palaography, (pp. 21, 22).

An inscription published by Mr. Rice (Ind. Ant. VIII. 25) gives particulars of this event. It appears that after his coronation the king made war on the Pallavas, killed in battle Nandi Potavarma, their king, and victoriously entered Kaūchi. He found that city richly decorated with sculptures which had been executed under the orders of a former king. Narasishka Pōtavarma, amongst them being images of Rējavinkā (?) Vikramaditys II, when he left Kaūchi, travelled on to the coast, and took up his residence there, for a time, in a town on the sea.

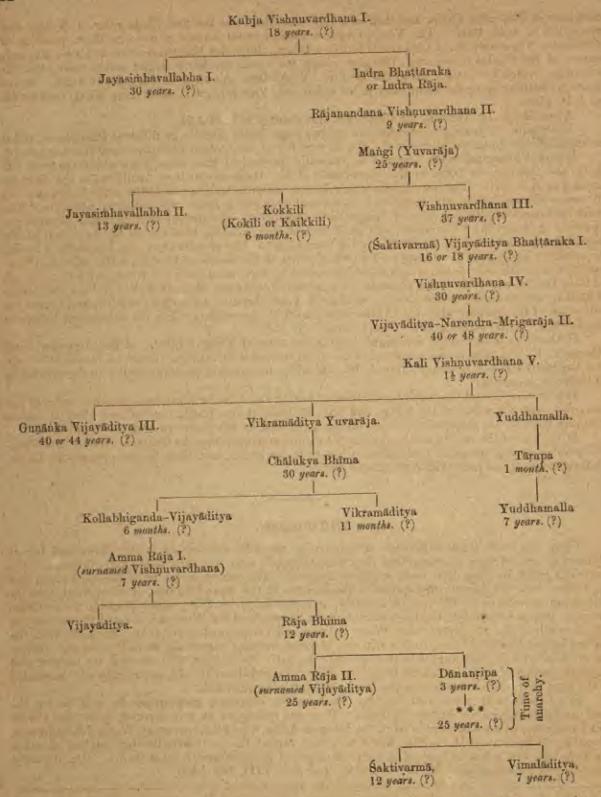

2 Ind. Ant. V. 17.

3 In Bilhama's Vikramādkakātys, it is claimed for Somešvara I that he conquered the Cholas, apparently twice; and it expressly states that the Chola monarch had attacked him. But several inscriptions mention Kulottanga's defeat of the Chalukyan sovereign. (Ind. Ant. V. 318).

4 (Ind. Ant. V. 319.—023). While in camp on the Tuńgabhadra, Vikrama heard of the death of his father-in-law. He marched on Kaūchi, crashed a rebellion there, put the rightful heir on the throne, and then seized Gangaleonasionaparuma. Shortly after he had retired he heard of the death of the newly enthroned monarch, and of the seizers of the Chola throne by "Rājiga, lord of Vongi," a member of the family. Vikrama effered battle, but was attacked in rear by his brother Somešvara, whem he defeated, while Rājigā fied. Vikrama then ascended the throne of the Chalukyas, A.D. 1076. He is suid to have conquered the Cholas on two subsequent occasions.

CHALURYAS, EASTERN.

Vimalādītya married Kundavā, daughter of Rājarāja of the Sūryavamša, and younger sister of Rājarāja Chola. His successor Rājarāja of the Chandravamša married (A.D. 1022) Iramonanga, (P) daughter of Rājendra Chola, and their son Rājendra Chola was the first Chola ruler of Vengī, and succeeded in A.D. 1064.¹ The Vengī kingdom thenceforward became a mere northern province of Choladeŝa. The succession of Cholas will be given below. Rājendra Kulottunga I made his son Rājarāja regent of the Chālukya country; but after ruling for a year the latter retired to the south, and the sovereign created his uncle Vijayāditya viceroy. Vijayāditya governed Kalingā for 15 years. On his death Kulottunga gave the viceroyalty to his second son, Viranātha, who ruled there till at least as late as A.D. 1102.

According to Dr. Burnell, the Cholas lost this country in 1228 A.D.

The number of years given to each sovereign's reign varies slightly in different inscriptions, and it is impossible yet to be quite certain of dates, as very few of the Eastern Chālukya inscriptions are dated. Kubja Vishņuvardhana's conquest is generally believed to have taken place about the year 605 A.D., and this may be taken as the approximate date. He seems to have finally separated from his brother in A.D. 610. The inscriptions of this dynasty unfortunately contain little more than mere lists of names with no details, and therefore it is impossible as yet to frame any connected narrative. The main landmarks are the conquest of Kubja Vishņuvardhana;—the struggle for the throne between the two sons of Mangi the "Yuvaraja" and their half-brother Kokkili, resulting in the expulsion of the latter after he had ruled for six months;—the usurpation of Tarapa who drove out Amma Raja I's son Vijayāditya and seized the throne;—his own ejection at the hands of Chālukya Bhīma's son Vikramāditya, a month later;—the struggles which ensued between rival claimants ending with the triumph of Rāja Bhīma, who reigned for 12 years;—the accession of Amma Rāja II in 945 A.D., a date which is fixed by an inscription;—the anarchy of 27 or 30 years (duration not certain) which ensued;—and the extinction of the dynasty when the Cholas succeeded to the sovereignty. For the subsequent history of the Eastern Chalukyas, see under "The Cholas" (p. 154).

In the reign of one of the sovereigns bearing the name of Vishnuvardhana at Rajahmundry, lived Nannayya Bhatta, who, at the command of the king, composed the Telugu version of the Mahābhāratu, (see Campbell's Telugu Grammar, Introd., IX—X, where the original passage relating to the authorship of the poem is quoted).

The Eastern Chalukyas may be considered as having ruled during these four centuries more or less peaceably over the whole of the Vengi and part at least of the Kalinga countries; being disturbed probably more by the Gajapatis of Orissa on the north than by any power on their south and west.

At the end of the twelfth and beginning of the thirteenth centuries, the Ganapati sovereigns of Orangal were acquiring power in the Eastern Chālukyan territories, and they finally ejected the Chola-Chālukyas about the year 1228 A.D. (Dr. Burnell).

THE CHERAS.

There has been much difference of opinion in scientific quarters as to the Chera and Kongu Dynasties, some writers asserting that they were identical, some that they were totally different. The territories ruled by them have been variously assigned. The opinion seems to be gaining ground that the Cheras were the dynasty that preceded the Kongus in the same kingdom, in other words that the first seven sovereigns of the Kongu Dynasty, as given below (p. 189), ought properly to be styled Cheras. Others believe that the Cheras ruled almost the whole of the Western Coast and the country far inland, north of the Pandiyans, west of the Pallavas and Cholas, and south of the Konkana, from the earliest known historical times, their territories, of course, varying perpetually as their arms were victorious or the reverse in their wars with their neighbours, until the Kongus, who occupied the eastern and northern portion of their dominions, including Maisur, overwhelmed the old sovereignty and succeeded to the most part of their dominions, the Western Coast being excluded.

The Cheras were mentioned by the oldest known European geographers as well as by the most ancient writers yet known in India. They are spoken of as contemporary with the Cholas and Pandiyans, and are so mentioned in the edicts of Asoka, where their sovereign is called Keralaputra. According to Ptolemy (VII, I, 86), Karar was their capital then. Hiwen-Thsang does not mention the kingdom, but refers to part of it under the name of Konkanapura (Konkanahalli). (Dr. Burnell's South-Indian Paleography, p. 33, notes 1 and 2; Ind. Ant. VIII, 145, 146.)

&lt;sup>1</sup> This is Sir Walter Effict's account. I confess it puzzles and perplexes me at present, because it does not seem to tally with other contemporary statements, but all will soon become clear, it is to be hoped, and meanwhile it is fitting that I should quote the opinions of the best authorities.

Those who desire to study the subject should read Mr. Foulkes's historical sketch of the country in question in the Salem District Manual, and Professor Dowson's Paper in Vol. VIII of the Royal Asiatic Society's Journal. See also Dr. Burnell's South-Indian Palacography, p. 33, &c.; the Markara Plates (Ind. Ant. I, 361—366; II, 271, note, and V, 133); the Nagamangalam Plates (Ind. Ant. II, 155, III, 159, and 269). ### THE CHOLA KINGS.

The Chola 1 Kingdom forms one of the three great divisions of Southern India, which existed from the earliest known historical times. The Cholas held the east, the Pandiyans the south, and the Cheras the west. This distinction existed as far back as the days of Asoka, and is confirmed by Greek writers. Unfortunately Chola history is almost a blank till the days of Rajaraja (1023 A.D.). We have not even a legendary list of names to guide (or mislead) us as with the Pandiyans.

The Chola capital seems to have been at Uraiyur (Warriore) close to Trichinopoly in the second century A.D., at Malaikarram (Kumbakonam?)2 in the seventh, and at Tanjore (?) in the tenth-(Dr. Barnell). It was at Gangaikondasorapuram at one time, probably in the tenth century, being fixed finally at Tanjore early in the eleventh. The ancient name for the Chola country, according to Dr. Burnell (South Indian Palacography, 47, note 4,) was Malakūta. "The Chola banner had a tiger on it, which the kings of this dynasty must have taken from the Pallavas." (ib. 107.)

I have met with only two lists, which can be at all depended upon, of Chola sovereigns reigning prior to Rajaraja. The first is given by Mr. Lewis Rice (Mysore and Coorg, I, 212) as that of Cholas reigning in the east of Maisur.

A.D. 867 to 927 Adityavarmā, Rājendra Chola ... 927 to 977 Vira Chola, Narayanaraja Dasoditya Rāva ... Parandaka Raya, Hari Mali ... Divya Raya, or Deva Raja Chola Harivari Dava, or Tribhuvana Vīra Deva Chola 986 to 1023

But Mr. Rice adds, "There is no certainty regarding either the names or the dates," and he does not give his authority for the list. The second is by Mr. Foulkes (Salem District Manual, Vol. I, p. 39).

Vijayadi Raya. Adityavarma Raya or Vijaya Raya Aditya Varma. ? about A.D. 878. Vira Chola Raya olies Vīra Choļa Nārāyana Rāya. Builder of the Kanaka-sabhā at Chidambaram. Desotya Raya Hariñjaya Raya or Arubjeya Raya. or Dasoditya Raya, died souless.

None of them, however, must be depended upon for a memoria as they come from most untrustworthy sources.

* Mole: = "hill," burrows = "subdivision." The place seems also to have been called "Malakuja." (Ind. Ant. VII, 39).

Appropriately it gave its name to a tract of country, for mention is made of a Brahman village, "the creament of Malakuja." Dr. Burnell thinks that "Malakuja" was "the kingdom comprised, roughly speaking, in the delta of the Kavert."

15 CHOLAS,

I have cut the genealogy short as it is unnecessary here to give the whole.

Dr. Burnell thinks that the Cholas were extending their power to the northwards about the period from 850 to 1023 A.D. by warfare and inroads, and he attributes the thirty (or twenty seven) years' anarchy in the Eastern Chalukyan dominions to Chola invasions. With Rajaraja (1023 A.D.) the history becomes all more clear, but previous to that reign we are as yet very much in the dark. Dr. Burnell tentatively fixes Karikala Chola about the year 950 A.D., but this is not as yet conclusive.

The Chola kingdom was in existence as early as 250 B.C., being mentioned in the inscriptions of Asoka where it is called "Chōda." It was also known to the Greek Geographers and is noticed in the Periplūs Maris Erythræi, and in Ptolemy (130 A.D.), the capital being then at Uraiyūr. It is clear from the legends in the Madura Sthala Purāna and the Sritāla Book that, according to Pandiyan tradition, the kingdom of Chola was as old as that of the Pandiyans, or even older, since the son of the founder of Madura is stated to have married the daughter of the Chola king. These legends allude perpetually to wars between the Cholas and Pandiyans, but there is no need to discuss the question as to their authenticity. If the two nations were contemporary, it is almost certain that they must have been constantly at feud, but the particular battles mentioned in the legends are probably purely mythical.

At the beginning of the seventh century we read in an inscription of the celebrated Satyasraya or Pulikesi II of the Chalukyan dynasty, that that sovereign ruined the Pallavas of Kanchi, and had proposed to himself to annihilate the Cholas; but the expedition seems to have been abandoned. A few years later, viz., about the year 640 A.D., Hiwen-Thsang heard of the kingdom though he did not visit it. Vikramaditya I of the Western Chalukyas (670-680?) claims to have conquered Chola, though the statement is not necessarily to be credited. He, however, seems certainly to have defeated the Pallavas, and to have seized Kānchīpura. (The "Seven Pagodas" probably date from this reign.) Vinayāditya (A.D. 680?--696), his successor, also claims, and probably with equal want of truthfulness, to have conquered the Cholas. About 60 years later the Western Chalukyan Kingdom seems to have collapsed, and to have only risen again to power after a lapse of two centuries. In Wilson's Mackenzie Manuscripts (I, pp. 198-9) mention is made of an inscription which shows that in 894 A.D. the Cholas, under their king Adityavarma, conquered the Chera or Kongu country. The date seems to be somewhat uncertain but there can be little doubt that this conquest really did take place, and that the Cholas held the Kongu country (Maisūr mainly) till the tenth century, when the Hoysala Ballalas arose on the ruins of the Kongu kings. Tailabhūpa Vikramāditya of the Western Chalukyas states that he was victorious over the Cholas; and Jayasinha III (1018--1042) makes a similar boast. This brings us down to the reign of the Chola sovereign Rajaraja, who was a contemporary of Jayasimha's, and was one of the most powerful chiefs of his time. He raised the Chola kingdom to great eminence. Dr. Burnell thinks that it is certain that the Cholas were conquered by the Chalukyas shortly before the beginning of the eleventh century, i.e., shortly before the reign of Raja Raja (1023-1064 A.D.) He writes of Raja Raja ;-" This king must have restored Tanjore, which, according to Al-Biruni, was in ruins at the beginning of the eleventh century.5 This fact confirms the earlier Chalukya boasts of conquest, and was certainly owing to them."

<sup>5</sup> Al-Birani wrote at the beginning of the eleventh century. He died A.D. 1039. He is quoted by Rashid-ad-din (I310 A.D.). (Sir Henry Elliot's History of India, I, 66; Reinaud Fragments, pp. 92, 121; Missoire, p. 284). The king had built "another city on the shore called Padmar."

During the early period, before the eleventh century, the Cholas were repeatedly attacked by powers other than those above mentioned, and we hear of them in succession as being conquered by or conquering the Kadambas, the Pandiyans, and others.

Singhalese annals give us an invasion of Ceylon by Cholas about the year 247 B.C. (the date is quite unauthenticated), in consequence of which the Cholas ruled the island for 44 years; also a second invasion a hundred years later, and a third in the year 110. A.D. A counter invasion of Chola territories by Singhalese took place in 113 A.D., and subsequent to this, warfare between the two races was of constant occurrence. In the middle of the tenth century it is said that the king of Ceylon sent an army to the assistance of a Pandiyan king who was then at war with the Cholas, but that the Pandiyans were defeated, and the Cholas, in revenge, invaded Ceylon but were repulsed. The next thing we hear of relates to the reign of Rajaraja, a period when, as before stated, the chronicles appear more trustworthy.

Dr. Burnell has given the succession thus (South-Indian Palaeography, p. 40, note 1).

Karikāla Chola, ? about 950 A.D.

Rajaraja Chola alias Narendra, 40 or 41 years-A.D. 1023 to 1064.

Vira Chola alias Kulottunga Chola I, alias Rājarājendra (Rājarāja) Koppākešarivarmā, 49 years - A.D. 1064 to 1113. His Abhisheka took place in 1079.

> Vikrama Chola, 15 years-A.D. 1113 to 1128.

Kulottunga Chola II, Ruled over the whole 9 A.D. 1128 to Tamil Country for at least 30 years.

> Vikramadeva, reigning in A.D. 1235.

Rajaraja, owing to an intermarriage between the Cholas and Eastern Chalukyas, united the whole of Vengi and Kalinga to the Chola territories. (M.J.L.S. XIII, Pt. 2, p. 40). He came to the throne in the same year as King Mihindu IV. of Ceylon, i.e., in 1023 A.D. Ten years later—years during which constant emigration was taking place from the mainland to Ceylon-King Mihindu, overwhelmed with the perpetual influx of foreigners, lost his authority both over his own people and the strangers, and fled to Ambagalla. Rajaraja invaded the island twenty-six years after this event, i.e., in 1059 A.D., and was completely successful. He seized the government, took Mihindu prisoner, and sent him with his queen and the crown jewels to the mainland, appointing a Chola Viceroy to govern the conquered territory. Milindu died in 1071 A.D., still in captivity.

Previously to this, however, viz., in 1064, the throne of the Cholas passed to Kulottunga I or Rajendra Chola, one of the greatest princes of his day. Besides assuming the sovereignty over his own territories, which, by the union of the Chola and Eastern Chalukya countries, extended up to the borders of Orissa, he conquered in A.D. 1064 and annexed for a time the whole of the Pandiyan kingdom, and by the prowess of his illegitimate son Adondai (according to native tradition) completely and for ever crushed the power of the Pallavas of Kanchi. Although it must be admitted that proof is as yet wanting, I incline to the belief that there is at least a basis of historical truth underlying this native tradition. At any rate it seems certain that the annexation of the kingdom of the Pallavas to that of the Cholas took place at this period. It is further stated in the great inscription round the temple at Tanjore that the Cholas, towards the beginning of the eleventh century, conquered Bengal (Burnell's South Indian Palasography, p. 22, note 6). Either in the reign of Rajaraja or in that of Kulottunga Iprobably the former—the Cholas swept over the Western Chalukya country. It was during the reign of Somesvara I of the latter dynasty. (Mr. Fleet's Kanarese Dynasties, p. 46 and note 2). They destroyed a number of Jain temples at Puligere or Lakshmesvara, but their success was only temporary. They were driven over the Tungabhadra and their leader killed. The date of this event is possibly 1059-60 A.D. In the Vikramānkadevacharita of Bilhana, Somesvara I is said to have "penetrated as far as Kanchī itself, stormed it, and driven its ruler into the jungles," but this is probably a mere poetical exaggeration and really allades to the victory above mentioned. A little later the Cholas are again found fighting with the Western Chālukyes, this time with a Pallava (?) of Vengi.

Vikramāditya VI, of the Western Chalukyas, who reigned from 1075 to 1126 A.D., was, previons to his accession, always at fend with his elder brother Somesvara II, and during his reign occupied himself in warfare on his own account against the enemies of his country. At this period he is said to have repeatedly defeated the Cholas and plundered Kanchi (it is almost impossible to believe this, and the authority seems to be only the Vikramankaderacharita), to have destroyed the sandalwood forests of the Malaya hills, to have slain the king of Kerala, and conquered the cities of Gangaikondapuram (Gangakunda-Mr. Fleet), Vengi and Chakrakota or Chakragotta (?) He had married a daughter of the Chola king, and on the occurrence of a rebellion in the Chola country, in which his brother-in-law was killed (this, if true, must have been Rajaraja and the dute A.D. 1064), he heard that Rajiga, king (?) of Vengi, had marched down and seized Kanchi. Vikramaditya marched to the south to meet Rajiga, and his brother Somesvara followed with another army "promising outwardly to assist his brother, but intending to play the traitor." A battle ensued in which Rajiga was defeated and fled, and Somesvara was taken prisoner (i.e., the Cholas were victorious at all points). Vikramaditya then proclaimed

The above account is all taken from Mr. Fleet's new publication, and he draws his information from Bilhana, who, being a Hindu poet, is almost certain to be absolutely wrong in details, though his story may be based on the truth. I do not therefore discard the tale on account of the discrepancy in dates, for it is quite possible that the latter part of the story may refer to a date eleven years later than the rebellion which caused the Chola king's death—the date, that is, of Vikramaditya's accession to the throne.

Kulottunga I was a man of many names. Thus he is called "Vīra," "Rājendra," "Koppākēšarivarmā," or "Kopparakēšarivarmā," "Kōvirāja Kēšari," and others. He conquered Āhavamalla, or Somešvaradeva I of the Western Chalukyas in a battle near the Tungabhadrā, a fact which is recorded in several inscriptions. The Pandiyan king whom he conquered was Vira Pandiyan, son of Vikrama Pandiyan. (Inscriptions at Chidambaram. Dr. Burnell's South-Indian Palwography, p. 45, note 1.)

Kulottunga placed his younger brother Gangaikondan Chola on the throne of Madura.

Reverting to Ceylon we find that Kulottunga held firmly to his father's conquest for the first few years of his reign. Young prince Kasyapa, however, son of Mihindu, who was at the most 26 years' old at the capture of his father, had been gradually consolidating his power while in exile amongst the hills, and he succeeded in beating back the Chola Viceroy's army when it marched against him, even though the latter was aided by a force of 10,000 men sent over from the mainland to its assistance. Mihindu died in 1071, and Kasyapa, proclaiming himself King of Ceylon, was making great preparations for driving the usurpers out of the island, when his career was cut short by his early death. He could not have been more than 38 years old. The throne of Ceylon was seized by the son of the minister Lokesvara on the demise of Kasyapa, there being no other claimants for the purple. He called himself Vijaya Bahu I, and proclaimed war against the Cholas. The natives flocked to his standard. and fighting soon afterwards commenced. A general action was, after a protracted and desultory warfare, fought under the walls of Pollonnaruwa, and the Cholas were defeated and driven into the town. After a siege of six weeks the town was carried by storm, and the defenders put to the sword. The king's authority was soon recognized all over the island. Shortly after this, Vijaya Bahu insulted the Chola king by giving the first place in precedence at an audience to the envoy from Siam in preference to the Chola ambassador, and this so enraged Kulottunga that he seized the Singhalese envoy at his court and cut off his nose and ears. War ensued. The Cholas landed at Mantotte, defeated the Singhalese army, and marched on the capital. The king fled, and the Cholas demolished the city. Recovering himself soon, however, Vijaya Bahu returned to the attack, defeated the invaders, and drove them from the island.

Dr. Burnell states, on the authority of an inscription at Karuvar, that this prince assumed the title of "Sundara Pandiyan."

Kulottunga died in 1113, and three years later, during the reign of his son and successor, Vikrama

Chola, the Singhalese invaded the Chola country but were driven back without difficulty.

All the old native chronicles unite in narrating the glories of Kulottunga's illegitimate son Adondai, the conqueror of the Pallavas. An inscription at Tiruttani (Vol. I, p. 158) in the Pallava country gives a genealogy of five generations, and the local chronicle of Narayanavanam (ib., pp. 157, 158) mentions four, of which the names correspond, thus:—

Tiruttani Inscription.
Karikāla Chola.
Chakravarti.
Sudhāmā.
Ruchira.
Nārāyana Rāja.

Ādondai. Sundama Rāja. Surasira Rāja.

Nārāyana Rāja.

Narayanavanam Chronicle.

These evidently refer to the same persons, and "Chakravarti" is a common title of Adondai. Adondai is always declared to be the son of Kulottunga I. Was, then, "Karikala Chola" another of the latter's numerous names? This point is interesting and important.

If native chronicles are to be believed in this respect, Kulottunga I had a brother Sarangadhara, another son of Rājaraja Chola. In the Appakāviyamu or Appa Kavi's Commentary on the Grammar of Nannayya Bhatta, Sarangadhara is stated to have been the son of Rājarāja, and this is repeated in the Sārangadharacharita. A question arises whether this prince could possibly be identical with Śāranga, also called "Rudradeva" alīas "Churanga" "alīas Chōr Ganga" (Chola or Sōra Ganga), who, summoned from Karnataka by the chiefs of Orissa after the collapse of the Keśari Dynasty of that kingdom, founded the Gangavamsa family of Orissa about the year A.D. 1132. The dates seem at first sight fatal to the theory, but our Orissan chronology is as yet very imperfect. It is to be observed that Kulottunga claims to have reduced Bengal.

The facts noted above enable some slight additions to be provisionally made to the genealogy of the eleventh century Cholas. All will doubtless become clear when the many extant inscriptions are carefully studied, but at present the following is put forward tentatively. The main points are taken from Dr. Burnell's Palaeography, which, in some respects, follows Dr. Caldwell.

(A. sister ?) ? Vijayāditya, Rajaraja Chola, A sister. Governor of Vengi or Kulinga married Vikramāditya alias Rajaraja Narendra, married Vallavarai VI of the Western for 15 years under his nephew; or simply Narendra, Yavadyadeva. Chālukyas (?) (1023-1064). Killed during died A.D. 1079. (Inscriptions at Tanjore.) a rebellion (?) Gangaikondan, Kundava, Sarangadhara? Vīra, alias Rajendra Chola, alias Kulottunga I, alias Rajarajendra, ascended the throne of married Madura after his father's Vimalāditya ulias Koppā (or Koppara) Kēšarīvarmā, alias Konēri Nanmai Kondān, alias conquest of the Pandiyan of the Eastern Koviraja Kesarivarma. Appa Kavi declares that Śarangadhara studied Telugu Grammar directly under Nannayya Bhatta, but if the prince was son of Rajaraja Chola, this is impossible. For he would not have been born much before A.D. 1923, while Nannayya Bhatta's date must have been earlier by a century. The latter was contemporary with an Eastern Chalukyan sovereign named Vishnuvardhana, residing at Rajahmundry (Introd. to Nannayya Bhatta's Teluga Translation of the Mahdbhavata. Campbell's Teluga Grammar, Introd., pp. ix., x) and the last sovereign of that name that we as yet know of was Amma Raja I, who bore that title (Ind. Ant., VIII, 76). His data is A.D. 918-925, or thereabouts. On the other hand it is noticeable that "Vishnuvardhana" was a title of the Eastern Chalukyan Dynasty borne by many sovereigns, and especially the later ones (Vol. I, p. 105, note).

Vikrama Chola, (By a dancing girl) Rajaraja. Viradeva, alias (A daughter). A.D. 1113 to 1128. Rajendra, mentioned in inscriptions about the Godavarī and Krishnā Little seems to be known of the sovereign Vikrama. Kulottunga Chola II 2 succeeded. His reign came to an end at some time subsequent to the year 1158 A.D. Dr. Burnell then gives us Vikramadeva Chola reigning in A.D. 1235. If the copies sent to me of inscriptions about the Godavari and Krishna Rivers are accurate, Kulottunga II had a son Rajendra, whose inscriptions are found in that tract between A.D. 1165 and 1194. He was succeeded there by, apparently, an anarchy, when petty rulers held sway, preparing the way for their complete overthrow by the Ganapatis of Orangal, who seized and held the country firmly till the fourteenth century. So fell the Chola sovereignty north of the Pennar.

According to Singhalese annals Parakrama Bahu I (1153-1186) attacked Kulasekhara, the Pandiyan king, at one period of his reign (the date is not given), subdued Ramesvaram and the six neighbouring provinces, and drove the king from the throne of Madura. Vira Pandiyan, son of Kulasekhara, was installed as king of Madura. The ousted monarch sought aid from the Cholas and attacked the Singhaless. The allies were defeated, and a considerable portion of the Chola country was captured by the invaders, on which Kulasekhara submitted. He was then restored to his throne, Vira Pandiyan being comforted by the gift of the conquered Chola country as a principality. After this, the Singhalese retired.

If the copies of two of the Conjecveram inscriptions which, by the kindness of Mr. Foulkes, I had access to are correct (Nos. 178 and 204 of my List, Vol. I, pp. 184-85), there was a second Rajaraja Chola, of whom we now hear for the first time, who came to the throne in A.D. 1216, and ruled till at least A.D. 1232. Vikrama (ruling in A.D. 1235) probably succeeded him. It was in the reign of this Rajaraja II that Kalinga was lost to the Cholas, if the date of this event, as given by Dr. Burnell (A.D. 1228), is accurate. (South Indian Palwography, p. 40, note 4.)

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Burnell writes of him (South Indian Poleography, p. 40, note 37): "He was reigning in 1134 A.D. . . . . In his time there must have been a great many Buddhists in Tanjore, as Parakrama Bahu (King of Ceylon, 1155 to 1186) fetched his priest from these according to the Mahawahso."

The deductions of Sir Walter Elliot from inscriptions vary from those of Dr. Burnell regarding the relatives of Rajendra

The deductions of Sir Walter Elliot from theorytics viry from those of Dr. Burnell regarding the relatives of Rajendra Knlottunga I. I therefore append extracts from the former's writings on the subject (Numismatic Giannings, No. 2, in M.J.L.S., Vol. IV, N.s., 1858, p. 94, etc.; c.s., Vol. XX:—"Rajendra Chola was succeeded by his son Vikrama Deva surnamed Kulottunga Chola. On the death of his nucle, Vijayaditya, who had been viceroy of Vengidesam, the king deputed his son Rajaraja to assume the office, but after holding it for one year, A.D. 1078, he resigned it in favor of his younger brother Vira Deva Chola, who assumed the title of Kulottunga Chola. His grants are found in great numbers from A.D. 1079 up to the year 1135, when a partial restoration of the Chalukya line appears to have taken place, and they maintained a divided and feeble influence till the latter part of the twelfth century, when the country fell under the sway of the Kakatiya dynasty of Warangal." On page 40 he gives the succession thus:—

26. Rajaraja Narsudra.

<sup>26.</sup> Rajaraja Narendra.

Rajendra Chola.
 Vikrama Deva Kulottunga Chola.

30. Vira Dava Kulöttunga or Saptama Viahnuvardhana, viceroy from A.D. 1079 to 1135.

* Inscriptions in the Vengt country will doubtless throw light on this important point. At Kunkulagunta, in the Narasaravupeta Taluk of the Kistna District, is an inscription which would point to the Ganapatis of Orissa having acquired power in that country as early as A.D. 1197; while there is a Ganapati inscription at Draksharama in the Godavari District, dated in 1176 A.D. The latest Ganapati inscription in that tract is dated A.D. 1336, Another of the Conjecveram inscriptions gives, according to the copy, Perunjings or Kopperunjinga Chola as commencing to reign in A.D. 1242 (Inscription No. 265), his grant being in A.D. 1260.

He reigned at least twenty years (No. 191).

Again, another (No. 101) gives a sovereign as commencing to reign in A.D. 1250, his grant being in 1266. Inscription No. 194 determines his name to have been "Vijayakanda Gopaladeva," and the coincidence seems to show that this is probably correct. The dates, however, conflict, and until the originals are examined nothing can be definitely stated.

The next date that I find is that of Mathurantaka Pozrapi Chola, who began to reign A.D. 1286, and held the sovereignty till the Musalman invasion of A.D. 1310. (No. 74 of the Conjecterum Inscriptions.)

These names and dates, though at present put forward doubtfully, seem to afford reasonable hope of our being soon able, after careful examination of the original inscriptions, to carry on a connected narrative of the history of the Cholas down to the Musalman conquest of A.D. 1310; and if so, a considerable step forward will have been made.

The Musalman conquest seems to have finally crushed the power of the Cholas. I am only acquainted with two allusions to Cholas after that event. One is to be found in one of the inscriptions at Conjeeveram (No. 98), which consists of a command issued by Sadásiva of Vijayanagar to "Rājakumāra Bhangappadeva Chola" to conduct certain festivals at the temple at Conjeeveram. The other will be noticed below.

The Musalmans seem to have held the country till A.D. 1347, when they were driven across the Krishna by a powerful Hindu confederation. According to one of the Conjeeveram inscriptions (No. 60), just at that period a chief by name Narayana Sambuva Rayar claims sovereignty at Kanchi and dates his grant in his ninth year, placing his accession in A.D. 1337. He seems to have ruled for at least eighteen years (Inscription 58), which brings us down to A.D. 1355.

It now becomes a question whether the almost extinct power of the Cholas once more and for the last time asserted itself in the person of a second Vijayakanda Gopaladeva. The usurpation of a family of Udaiyars, probably from the Kanarese country, whose earliest recorded date at Kanchi is that of Kampana, son of Bukkana Udaiyar, in A.D. 1365, is well established by inscriptions at various localities. And amongst the Conjecveram inscriptions are two, by the same local chieftain, one of which is dated in the twentieth year of Vijayakanda Gopaladeva, and the other in the reign of Kampana Udaiyar. This, if authentic, would help us to bridge the interval of nine years between A.D. 1356 and 1365. Kampana was succeeded by Arayanna or Aryena Udaiyar in or before the year 1377, for we have an inscription of the latter's reign dated in that year. Aryena was succeeded by his son Viruppanna.2 The latter seems to have been conquered or superseded by King Harihara of Vijayanagar, and it is, indeed, not improbable that these Udaiyars were either generals or chiefs of the early Vijayanagar sovereigns. There seems reason, however, to believe that for a century and a half the Vijayanagar sovereignty was not very firmly established till, in the reigns of the kings of the Narasimha dynasty, the whole was finally reduced to subjection.

Their followed the supremacy of the Nayakkas of Madura during the decline of the great sovereignty, and these were followed by the Mahratta dynasty, who ruled the country precariously till it passed into the hands of the English.

Bukkanca, married Janemadevi, and gave her the town of Pennakonda.

Virupanna. Inscriptions A.D. 1344, 1354, 1364 (Pennakonda), His minister constructed the fort at Pennukonda.

Kampana. Inscriptions A.D. 1365, 1365 (Koñekl), 1371, 1374 (Rāmnād).

Arayanna or Aryena. Inscriptions A.D. 1377 (South Arcot), 1378 (Kanchi).

Virupanna.

Inscriptions A.D. 1336, 1396 (South Arcot).

It must be considered as not quite conclusively proved that the Bukkanna who is mentioned as father of Virupanna, and the Bukkanna who is mentioned as father of Kampana, were one and the same person, but there is little reason to doubt it.

&#x27;Mathers-entaka, "the cause of the end of Madura," or the "Yama (god of death) of Madura." It cannot yet be decidedly stated whether this was a more title significative of the inveterate hatrid existing between the Chola and Pandiyan kingdoms, or whether it perpetuates an event in history. The title still exists in the Chola-Pallava country in the name of the town of "Matherantakam" in the Chingleput District, a flourishing place which gives its name to a taluk, and which probably was called after the sovereign.

2 I think the succession is as follows:—

DAKHAN, MUHAMMADAN KINGS OF THE ---

By way of preface to a sketch of these Musalman sovereignties of the Dakhan, it will be well to insert a few notes on the previous transactions of the Delhi kings in Southern India.

The first expedition of the Muhammadans into the Dakhan took place in A.D. 1306, when the Emperor 'Alau'd-din sent an ennobled slave, by name Malik Kafur, to bring to his senses the Raja Ramadeva of Devagiri (see the Yadavas or Devagiri), who had withheld tribute for three years. The Raja made no defence, but, being defeated in March 1307, accompanied his opponent to Delhi, where he received honourable treatment.

In 1309 Malik Kafur was again sent to the Dakhan to reduce the Ganapati king of Orangal, Rudradeva, better known as Pratapa Rudra II. The expedition was successful. The city was captured and the Raja made terms.\(^1\) Next year he was again despatched on a similar errand against the Hoysala Ballalas of Dvarasamudra. The general pushed forward with great energy and speed, passed Devagiri, and reached the Malabar Coast, where he built a mosque to commemorate the event. He attacked and stormed the city of Dyarasamudra, sacked the celebrated Hallabida temple, and returned to Delhi.2

In 1312 the Devagiri Yadavas again became troublesome, in the person of Sankaradeva, son of Rama, and Malik Kafur was once more sent to reduce the Raja to a proper sense of his inferiority. In the campaign which ensued the Musalmans were completely successful and the Raja lost his life. Four years later 'Alāu'd-dīn died and Malik Kāfur was at once murdered.

Mubarak Khilji became Emperor of Delhi in 1317, and one of his first acts was to make war for the third time on Devagiri. He captured the person of the Raja, Haripaladeva, son-in-law of Rama, and flayed him alive. The Nuh Sipihr of Amir Khusru gives a circumstantial account of a defeat of the Raja of Orangal by "Khusru Khan," generally known as Malik Khusru, in the reign of this sovereign, but no such event is recorded by Ferishta. The chief is said to have been commanded to go to "Arangal in Tillang," and to have obeyed. In the end, it is said, the Muhammadans were victorious, and retired after taking from the Raja all his moveable property.

Mubarak was murdered in A.D. 1321 by Malik Khusra, and the latter was killed by Ghazi Beg

Toghlak, Viceroy of Lahore, who,-all the royal family having been barbarously murdered by Malik Khusrū,—was chosen sovereign of the empire under the title of Ghiyūşu'd-din.

In 1321 he sent his eldest son, Ulugh Khūn, against Orangal. The capital was invested and a close siege took place. The garrison was on the point of capitalating when a panic seized on the Muhammadans owing to mischievous rumours spread about the camp that the Sultan was dead. Several of the generals fled, and the army became disorganized; so that, on a desperate sally being made by the garrison, the besiegers were beaten at all points and hastily retreated.

In 1323, however, the Sultan again made war on Pratapa Rudra with complete success. Orangal was captured and the Raja carried captive to Delhi. Ghiyasu'd-din was succeeded in 1325 by Muhammad.

In 1327 the Musalman Viceroy of the Dakhan rebelled, and the Emperor sent an expedition against him. He fled to Kampli close to Vijayanagar, whence the king's troops were compelled to retreat, the Vijayanagar king being too strong for them. The rebel fled to the Hoysala Ballala king at Tanur in Maisur, but the latter was too much in fear for his own safety to show any hospitality to the fugitive. He accordingly delivered him up to his master, who flayed him alive for his rebellious conduct.

Either in 1338 or 1339 the capital of the Muhammadan empire was arbitrarily removed to Deva-giri, which was rechristened Daulatabad by the sovereign Muhammad.

In 1341 ensued a revolt in Malabar, and Muhammad started to quell it, but fell sick on the way and returned to his capital. Shortly after this Orangal revolted, and the Sultan was powerless to effect

Three years later, in 1344, a Hindu confederation, consisting of the son (?) of Rudradeva of Orangal, Krishna "Nayakka," the Raya of Vijayanagar, and Ballaladeva of Dvarasamudra, with an immense force drove the Muhammadans out of Orangal and rolled back the tide of their advance.

This reverse was followed, three years later, by a revolt in the Muhammadan dependencies in the Dakhan. The Viceroy of Daulatabad proclaimed his independence, the royal troops were defeated, and the Viceroy became the first Bahmani king of the Dakhan.

Hasan, the Viceroy, now monarch, was originally a poor man who rose to eminence at court mainly by the help of a Brahman, one Gangu, whose name he, in gratitude, assumed when he established the new kingdom.

<sup>3</sup> Ferishta states that Malik Kafur marched as far as Ramesvaram and built a mosque there, but this statement is beginning to be discredited, as it is not shown to be supported by other testimony.

He fixed his capital at Kulbarga or Ahsanābād. The kingdom lasted about two and a half centuries, being succeeded by five separate kingdoms with capitals at Bidar, Bijapur (or Vijayapura), Golkonda, Birār, and Ahmadnagar.

I append a list of Bāhmani kings as given by Prinsep. Mr. Eastwick's List, published in his Handbook for Madras (p. 41), and founded on information supplied to him at Kulbarga, does not appear to me to be so accurate.

18. Kalām Ullāh, (1525 to about 1527).

'Alâu'd-dîn's reign was uneventful. He died on February 10th, 1358.

2. Muhammad plundered the country of the Ganapatis up to Orangal, and then made peace. He again invaded Orangal territories, and captured and put to death the Raja's son, Vinayaka or Nagadeva, obtaining Golkonda and its dependencies. Next he wantonly made war on Vijayanagar, and was guilty of terrible cruelties. This was in 1365-66. He was successful, and dictated terms of peace. He died March 21st, 1375.

3. Mujahid again wantonly attacked Vijayanagar and more than once invested the city, on one occasion penetrating into the second line of works; but he was compelled to retire. In the retreat he was murdered by his uncle Da'ad on April 14th, 1378.

Mujāhid's sister conspired against Dā'ūd in revenge, and on May 19th, 1378, Dā'ūd was assassinated. Mahmūd, the youngest son of 'Alāu'd.din, was raised to the throne.

5. Mahmud reigned peaceably and well for 19 years. He died April 20th, 1397.

6. His son, Ghiyasu'd-din, was blinded and imprisoned by a slave on June 9th of the same year, and (7) Shamsu'd-din was raised to the throne; but the sons of Da'ud attacked him and deposed him on November 15th, 1397.

8. Firoz, Da'nd's second son, succeeded and ruled for 25 years. In 1398 Deva Rāja of Vijayanagar invaded the Bāhmanī territories, and war ensued which was abruptly ended by the treacherous murder of Deva Rāja's son, when the Rāja fied and Firoz was victorious at all points. Another war broke out in 1401 owing to the Rāja of Vijayanagar's attempt to carry off a girl from Mudgal. Firoz invested Vijayanagar successfully, dictated terms, and married the Rāja's daughter. In 1417 the king again attacked Vijayanagar, but was defeated. He died September 15th, 1422, leaving a son Hasan, who, however, was quietly set aside, and acquiesced in the arrangement.

9. Ahmad (otherwise called Khān Khānān) made war on Vijayanagar soon after his accession, and was guilty of much unnecessary cruelty. He defeated the Rāja and obtained payment of tribute. A war with Orangal followed, which resulted in the death of its Rāja and the permanent destruction of the kingdom. He founded the city of Bidar and died there February 19th, 1435.

10. His son 'Alāu'd-dīn II succeeded. His brother Muhammad revolted, but was defeated and kindly treated. Muhammad, on this occasion, received aid from Vijayanagar. The capital of the Bahmani kingdom was definitely removed to Bīdar. In 1437 Deva Rāja of Vijayanagar again provoked a war, and some very severe battles were fought, after which a peace was arranged which lasted for some years. The king died in 1457.

11. He was succeeded by his son Humayan, a cruel and unscrupulous prince, who was murdered four years later, viz., on September 3rd, 1461.

12. His son Nizām Shāh was a boy of eight when he came to the throne, but his mother, who was a very remarkable woman, conducted the government for him with great success, assisted by the celebrated minister, Mahmūd Gawān. Their territories were invaded in 1461 by a large army from Orissa and Telingāna, which was driven back. The Muhammadan King of Malwa attacked Bīdar, and invested it while the queen and the young king fled. But a Gujarāti army in jealousy attacked Mālwa and the invaders retreated with great loss. In 1462 the king returned to Bīdar. He died suddenly on July 29th, 1463

13. His brother Muhammad was placed on the throne. In 1468 the young king, then fourteen years' old, took Mahmad Gawan as his chief minister. In 1469 he reduced the Konkana, wresting it from the power of Vijayanagar. In 1471 a relative of the King of Orissa, who had been ousted from the throne, begged aid from Muhammad Shah for the recovery of his rights. This was given, and Muhammad invaded Telingana. He captured Kondapalle and Rajahmundry and stayed for some time in that country, residing for three years at Rajahmundry. In 1477 occurred another expedition into Orissa, and the king marched to the sea-coast at Masulipatam. He took the opportunity to make a dash southwards along the coast as far as Conjeeveram, which he sacked, returning with an immense booty. In 1481 the king by a great misfortune lost the services of Mahmad Gawan. A plot was raised against the latter by the chief of a rival faction, Nizamu'l-mulk Bhairi, and the King, believing Mahmad to be false to him, put him to death. This act resulted in the downfall of the kingdom. The principal chiefs absented themselves from court and remained on their estates with all their forces. Yasuf 'Adil Khan, adopted son of Mahmud Gawan, was shortly afterwards sent to defend Goa against the Raja of Vijayanagar. Soon after this the king died, viz., on March 24th, 1482.

14. His son Mahmud II succeeded, Nigamu'l-mulk Bhairi being his minister. Yusuf 'Adil returned to court, but, on an attempt against his life being made, he retired to his estate at Bijapur. Mahmud went on an expedition to Telingana, and while there Nizamu'l-mulk was murdered. His son Malik Ahmad promptly proclaimed his independence at Juner. 'Imadu'l-mulk, Governor of Birar, Malik Ahmad promptly proclaimed his independence at Juner. 'Imadu'l-mulk, Governor of Birar, also revolted. At Bidar, Kasim Barid, a Turki or Georgian slave, was minister. The King betrothed his daughter to Yusuf 'Adil in 1497. Kasim Barid died in 1504, and his son Amir Barid held the king in absolute subjection. In 1512 Qutbu'l-mulk, Governor of Telingana, declared his independence at Golkonda, Some fighting between the royal troops and those of Bijapur and Birar followed. Mahmud died on October 8th, 1518.

15. Ahmad, son of the late king, was nominally placed on the throne by Amīr Barīd, but had no power, and died in 1520.

16. His brother 'Alau'd-din was next placed on the throne, but, on his attempting to rid himself of his minister, he was deposed in 1522 and shortly afterwards murdered.

17. His younger brother Wali was then installed but after two years was poisoned, and Amir Barid married his widow. This was in 1524.

18. Kalam Ullah, son of Ahmad, was then enthroned, but he escaped in 1527 and fled to Ahmad-nagar, where he remained till his death.

Amir Barid at once threw off all pretence at subjection, and established a new dynasty at Bidar, or Ahmadabad. And thus ended the Bahmani dynasty. The five kingdoms which sprung from it were as follows :-

Kasim Barid was minister to Mahmud Bahmani. Dying in 1504, his son Amīr became minister. He held the young Bahmani king in complete subjection, raised in succession four puppet sovereigns of that dynasty to the throne of Bidar, and, on the flight of the last to Ahmadnagar about 1527, became independent at the ancient Bahmani capital. Not long after this Isma'il 'Adil Shah took Bidar, but made it over again to Amīr Barīd, who then became almost a dependent of the Bijapur kings. His successor 'Alī Barīd first assumed the title of "Shāh." He lost almost all his possessions in a war with Burhan Shah of Ahmadnagar.

The dates of this dynasty are greatly confused as, according to Ferishta, 'Ali Barid reigned 45

For an account of Bidar, I beg to refer readers to Dr. Burgess's Third Archaeological Report, Bombay, published in 1878 (pp. 42-46).

(1.) Yūsuf'Adil, in 1493, defeated the Vijayanagar King and took immense treasure and 200 elephants. He surrounded Bijapur with a stone rampart. In 1510, the Portaguese captured Goa, and Yūsuf 'Adil recaptured it the same year. Albuquerque, however, made another successful attack, and Goa was finally ceded to the Portuguese (1516) by (2.) Ismā'il 'Ādil. In 1519 there was another war with Vijayanagar, in which the Raya Krishnadeva was victorious. (5.) 'Ali 'Ādil made a league with the Vijayanagar Raya Rāma, and defeated the Musalman King of Ahmadnagar; but in 1565 the Muhammadan sovereignties united and completely crushed the power of Rāma Rāya in the great battle of Talikōṭa. Vijayanagar was sacked and the temples and palacue. In 1555, or ten years previous, Ibrahim had unsuccessfully attacked Goa. In 1568 or 1570, 'Alī 'Ādil attacked Goa, but was repulsed. He took the fortress of Ādōni (Ādhvanī), and in 1577 compelled Rāma Rāya's brother, Tirumala, to retire to Chandragiri. During the reign of (7.) Muhammad 'Ādil Shāh, the Mahrattas began to rise to power. Sivājī revolted in 1648, and by 1662 had wrested from Muhammad the whole of the Koākana from Kalyāṇa to Goa. From then till 1680 he constantly defeated the King of Bijapur In 1686 the kingdom was seized and annexed by the Emperor Aurangzīb, being finally brought under the government of Delhi in 1688.

 Ahmad was son of Nizamu'l-mulk Bhairi, minister of the Bāhmanī State. He declared his independence in 1490 A.D., and founded the city of Ahmadnagar. He took Daulatābād (Devagiri) in 1499. Dying in 1508, he was succeeded by his son Burhan, then a boy seven years' old.

2. Burhan in 1523 married Maryam, the daughter of Yusuf 'Adil Shah of Bijapur. In 1531 he suffered a serious defeat at the hands of his brother-in-law Isma'il 'Adil Shah. He was after this constantly at war with the Bijapur State. In 1545 he made an alliance against Bijapur with the young king of Yijayanagar through his minister, and in 1549 another arrangement was come to with Yijayanagar for the partition of the Bijapur State. Burhan died in A.D. 1553.

3. Husain was only thirteen years' old when he succeeded. He at once suppressed a rebellion raised by his brother Abdu'llah. Shortly afterwards Ahmadnagar was besieged by an immense army sent by a confederation of the Bijapur and Vijayanagar States, Rāma Rāja being at the actual head of the latter. Hard terms were accepted and the siege was raised. In 1562 the same confederacy again attacked Ahmadnagar in consequence of Husain's attempt to recover Kalyāna, the ancient seat of the Chālukyas, which had been ceded to Bijapur. The capital was invested, but the siege was raised after a disastrous flood which swept away many thousands of the besieging army. In 1565 Husain joined the other Muhammadan princes in their grand attack on Vijayanagar, which resulted in the downfall of that kingdom, but he died the same year, June 7th.

4. His son Mürtaza succeeded. The war with Bijapur broke out afresh, but a peace was arranged on the understanding that Ahmadnagar should attack Birar, and Bijapur should seize the territories of Vijayanagar, each unopposed by the other. The Emperor Akbar sent an order to Mürtazā directing him not to interfere with Birar, but Mürtazā, disregarding the order, annexed that State to his own dominions in 1572. He was murdered by his son in 1587.

5. Miran gave way to excesses of all kinds, and murdered all the royal family. The minister, becoming terrified for his safety, sent for the king's cousin, Isma'il, then twelve years' old, intending to depose Miran. A revolt of troops followed. The minister had the king beheaded, but was himself murdered.

6. Ismā'il succeeded and nominally ruled for two years, but his father Burhān deposed him.

7. Burhan in 1592 despatched against the Portuguese an army which suffered a very severe reverse, the Muhammadan general being captured and sent to Portugal, where he became a Christian. The king died in 1594.

At his death, Burhan passed over his eldest son Isma'il and declared Ibrahim to be his successor.
 Ibrahim at once made war on Bijapur, but was killed in the first battle, four months after his accession to the throne.

9. Then ensued great confusion. Ibrahīm's son was an infant, and the army proclaimed for a boy named Ahmad, erroneously supposed to be of royal descent. The minister sent to the Moghuls for aid and defeated the leader of the military faction. He discovered too late his error in addressing the Moghuls, for Akbar's son Murad advanced with a large army to Ahmadnagar. The city was invested, and a desperate defence was made by the heroic Queen, Chand Bibī, Prince Murad only withdrawing on receiving the cession of Bīrar. The infant king was then crowned, and a new minister selected; but the latter treacherously plotted with the Emperor Akbar, who invaded the territory of Ahmadnagar. After a brave defence the city was captured, and Chand Bībī was foully murdered. The infant king was sent to Gwalior, and Mūrtazō, grandson of Burhān I, proclaimed himself king. He ruled well, but was deposed by his minister, the Abyssinian soldier Malik Ambar, in 1607.

The kingdom then virtually passed under the Moghul empire, but Malik Ambar held nominal rule at Ahmadnagar till his death in 1626, when the kingdom was finally annexed to Delhi.

The following table shows the genealogy of the family:-

THE QUIB SHAHI DYNASTY AT GOLKONDA.

							A.D.

6.	Abū Hasan	111			1994		1672-1688

1. Qutbu'l-Mulk was Governor of Telingana under Muhammad Bahmani, and withdrew from court after the death of Mahmud Gawan, the minister, residing at Golkonda. He remained loyal to his sovereign till the minister Kasim Barid's tenure of office, when he proclaimed his independence, A.D. 1512. The new king gradually extended his conquests. Krishnadeva Raya of Vijayanagar conquered all the country east of the ghats about the year 1516, but Sultan Quli defeated the Hindus at Kondapalle, and seized all the country between the Krishna and Godavari. Rajahmundry was then under the Gajapatis, who had received that province from Krishnadeva Raya. He also captured the fort of Orangal. There is an inscription at Kondapalle recording this sovereign's capture of the fort. The king was murdered at the instigation of his second son, Jamshīd.

2. Jamshīd blinded his elder brother and seized the throne. His reign is not remarkable. He died in 1550.

3. He was succeeded by his son Subhan, a boy of seven, but the latter was set aside by the nobles, and the late king's brother, Ibrahim, appointed. Ibrahim had, up to the time of his accession, lived at Vijayanagar under the care of Rama Raya. But he joined in the attack on Vijayanagar in 1565 A.D. Immediately after his return from this great victory, Ibrahim planned the capture of Rajahmundry from the Gajapatis of Orissa. This had been attempted in 1564, but the Hindu army collected in such force that the Musalmans were powerless. In 1567, however, the attack on Rajahmundry was perfectly successful, and the whole territory was annexed to Golkonda as far north as Chicacole. Many Hindu Rajas, south of the Krishna, were also overcome. He died suddenly in 1581. The king having poisoned his eldest son 'Abdu'l Qadir, and another having died, his third son, Muhammad, succeeded him.

4. Muhammad kept up constant warfare with the princes of Vijayanagar, then residing at Pennakonda, and held with great difficulty the province of Kondavidu, now known as Guntur. In 1589 he founded the present city of Haidarabad, then called Bhaghnagar. It is believed that Muhammad conquered Gandikota, Cuddapah, and all the country south of the Pennar, but this seems rather doubtful. 5. "Muhammad Koolli leaving no son, was succeeded by his brother Mahummud, who was succeeded by Abdoolla Koottub Shaw." (Scott's Ferishta, I, 410.) I have not been able to ascertain the exact relationship of 'Abdu'llah to Muhammad.

During the reign of Shah Jahan, Aurangzib attacked and defeated 'Abdu'llah and compelled him to submit to very hard terms. In 1667 the Mahratta Sivaji attacked the capital and exacted a large payment as tribute. 'Abdu'llah died in 1672, and was succeeded by his son-in-law Aba Hasan.

6. This king made an alliance with the Mahrattas in 1676, but was attacked by the Moghul troops in 1678. In 1685 he was attacked and completely defeated by Aurangzib in person, and was confined for life as a prisoner at Daulatabad.

In 1688 Golkonda was finally annexed.

The genealogy is as follows :-

GANAPATIS OF ORANGAL, THE .-

Very little is as yet known about the kings of this dynasty, and it is to be hoped that inscriptions exist which will throw light on the subject.

Prinsep's List, and that given in the Madras Journal XV, 219, in a paper called "A Statistical Report on the Circar of Warungul," by Dr. Walker (1849), are practically useless. So also is the manuscript analyzed by the Rev. W. Taylor and published in his Report on the Mackenzie MSS. (No. 32, countermark 722, republished in the Madras Journal X, 18-22). No inscriptions that I have yet met with (except one which will be mentioned below) carry the genealogy of the family further back than Prole or Prola Rāja, who seems to have flourished about the early part of the twelfth century. From the spelling of the names in his list, it is clear that Dr. Walker received his information orally, and not from any written chronicle or inscription. According to him the first king conquered the Chola country and married the daughter of the king of Ceylon. His son became insane, and his two grandsons succeeded and ruled jointly, having their capital at Nander on the Godávari. After these comes a break in the history, which commences again with a king living at Khandhar, from whom the crown descended directly in the male line to Prola Rāja. Including the first king of this new dynasty ten sovereigns are named before Prola Rāja. The names are hopelessly badly spelt and no good can be derived from reproducing them.

The succession appears to be as follows :-

1. Tribhuvana Malla.

 Prôla Rāja, or Prôlē, married Muppammadevi.

I This name is variously spelt Varangalla, Varangalla, Orangalla, Varangalla, Varangalla,

3. Pratāpa Rudra I.

4. Ganapatideva,
after whose death his scidose
5. Rudramma ruled for 38 years, 1257 to 1295 A.D.
A daughter.

6. Pratāpa Rudra II,
(1295 to 1323 A.D.)
Krishņa.

Vināyaka
alias Nāgadeva.

1. We know nothing as yet of Tribhavana Malla except that his name appears as father of Prola in an inscription at Anumakonda, which was published in J.A.S.B. VII, 901, in J.B.B.R.A.S. X, 46 by Dr. Bhau Daji, and quite recently by Mr. Fleet in the Indian Antiquary for January 1882 (XI, 9).1

2. According to tradition on the spot, Prola built the city of Orangal, eight of his predecessors having ruled at Anumakonda. He is said to have been a minor at his accession, to have defeated the Gajapati of Orissa, and to have been killed accidentally by his son, thus fulfilling a prophecy which foretold his fate exactly as it occurred. The Anumakonda inscription above-mentioned states that Prola captured and afterwards released "Tailappadeva," whom Mr. Fleet identifies with Taila III of the Western Châlukyas (A.D. 1150—1162). In Prola's time, too, occurred a siege of Anumakonda by Jagaddeva, one of the Santara kings of Maisūr, the besiegers being successfully repulsed by the garrison (Ind. Ant. XI, 10).

3. Rudra, or Pratāpa Rudra I, seems to have been a powerful prince. The inscription above-mentioned is dated in his reign (A.D. 1162). It mentions the death of Tailapa III, and narrates some conquests made by the Gaṇapatis, especially over one Bhīma, and the capture of the city of Chōdōdaya.

4. If Dr. Burnell (South-Indian Palaeography, p. 40, note 4) is right in his assignment of the date A.D. 1228 for the loss of the Kalinga country to the Cholas, it was probably in the reign of (4) Ganapatideva that that king conquered Kalinga, but there are, I think, reasons for not being too certain at present. The inscriptions in Kalingadesa are numerous, and await careful examination. It will very possibly be found that the Ganapatis had acquired power in those territories previous to that date.

5. Queen Rudramma was in many respects a very remarkable character. On her husband's death there was no heir to the throne, and she at once assumed the reins of government. Her long reign of thirty-eight years was marked by a most able system of administration, as is testified to by Marco Polo, who visited the coast south of the Krishna River at Mötupalle just at the close of the reign. He writes, — "This was formerly under the rule of a king, and since his death some forty years past it has been under his queen, a lady of much discretion, who, for the great love she bore him, never would marry another husband. And I can assure you that during all that space of forty years she had administered her realm as well as ever her husband did, or better, and as she was a lover of justice, of equity, and of peace, she was more beloved by those of her kingdom than ever was lady or lord of theirs before." (Colonel Yule's Marco Polo, II, 295.) In A.D. 1295 Rudramma's daughter's son having attained his majority, the queen abdicated in his favour.

6. This was the celebrated Pratāpa Rudra II (A.D. 1295—1323), one of the most powerful princes of his time, but destined to be virtually the last of his line. In A.D. 1295 the Muhammadans under 'Alāu'd-dīn, Governor of Oudh and nephew of Jalalu'd-dīn Khilji of Delhi, marched into the Dakhan and wantonly plundered the city of Devagiri, the capital of the kingdom bordering on Orangal. They exacted large tribute and retired. In 1306 'Alau'd-dīn, who by the murder of his uncle had raised himself to the throne, again sent an army into the Dakhan under the command of Malik Kāfur to reduce Devagiri in consequence of the Raja having refused to pay tribute. The Raja was captured and taken to Delhi. In 1309 the arms of the Musalmans were directed against Orangal. The first campaign was unsuccessful, but in the second Rudradeva was completely defeated and compelled to become tributary to Delhi, his capital being captured. In 1310 Malik Kafur was again sent southwards to reduce the Hoysala Ballalas of Dyarasamudra. In this he was completely successful and reached the Malabar Coast. where he built a mosque to commemorate the event. He captured the capital, sacked the celebrated temple of Hallebidu, and returned in triumph to Delhi. In 1312 Devagiri was again reduced by Malik Kafur, and the crown prince put to death. Six years later Mubarak Khilji of Delhi marched against, seized, and flayed alive Haripaladeva, son-in-law of Raja Ramadeva of Devagiri. Amir Khusru, in his Nuh Sipihr, gives an account of an expedition sent by the sovereign of Delhi under the leadership of Malik Khusru against Orangal, which resulted in the entire defeat of the Raja; but the circumstance is not recorded by Ferishta.2 Whether it occurred or not, the open hostility of the Muhammadans seems to have roused to the highest pitch the terror and anxiety of the Dakhani princes, and about the year 1326 Pratapa Rudra made an alliance with the Raja of Devagiri and threw off all semblance of fealty to the king of Delhi. He was probably incited to this important step by the disturbances at Delhi, which resulted, in 1321, in the subversion of the house of Khilji and the establishment of the dynasty of Tughlik. If so, he was very ill-advised, for one of the first actions of the new sovereign was to despatch an army (1321) to Orangal under his eldest son Ulugh Khan to reduce the refractory Raja.3 The expedition was, however, unsuccessful. The Muhammadan troops invested both the mud fort and the stone fort of Orangal, but were attacked during the siege by a terrible epidemic disease, became dispirited and panie-stricken, and, on being beaten at all points and driven from their camp by a courageous sally of the garrison, retired hastily and raised the siege. In 1323, however, a second large Musalman force marched southwards and captured Orangal. Pratapa Rudra was made prisoner and sent to Delhi. His son Krishna succeeded him, but with a much reduced kingdom. He revolted and turned the tables in 1344 by making a grand combination of Hindu States, and driving the Muhammadans out of the country. No attempt seems to have been made by the sovereigns of Delhi again to subvert the Orangal monarchy, but in 1858 Muhammad Shah Bahmani plundered the country up to the capital, and only retired on being paid the expenses of the war. The Muhammadan writers speak of Vināyakadeva ("Vinaik Deo"), alias Nāgadeva, as the son of the Rāja, and it may be presumed that the Rāja was then Krishna "Nāik." In 1371 war again broke out between Orangal and the Bāhmanī sovereign, which resulted in the disastrous defeat of the former, the fortress of "Vellumputtan" being captured and Prince Nagadeva being cruelly put to death (Scott's Ferishta, I, 18-20). The Hindus, however, so harassed the retreat of the victorious enemy that only a third of their number reached Kulbarga in safety. The Raja vainly attempted to induce the sovereign of Delhi to aid him, and on being again attacked, submitted and made over an immense treasure to the Dakhāni Muhammadans. A treaty was drawn up and boundaries fixed to the two kingdoms-

In 1424 Ahmad Shah Bahmani made war on Orangal, and the then Raja was killed. (I have been unable to ascertain his name, or relationship to Pratapa Rudra's family.) This is the last we hear of the Orangal Kingdom.

The outer walls of the city were then made of mud, and its circumference was 12,546 yards. The ramparts were stormed, after an unsuccessful night attack by the garrison.

2 Several points of interest may be observed in the narrative of Amir Khusra (Sir Henry Elliot's History of India, III, 558—561). Orangal's two lines of defences, one of mud and one of stone, are mentioned. Before the engagement, "Hindus made an attack upon Hindus to try their respective strength." "Fire-worshippers of Buddha" are alluded to as residing in the city. The latter were very possibly Jains, though why styled "Fire-worshippers" is not clear.

GUTTAS.

(See Mr. Fleet's Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, pages 6, 7.)

In the sixth century a dynasty of "Mauryas" was reigning in the Końkana, who claimed to be descendants, and possibly were so, of the Maurya dynasty of Pataliputra (see under Andersa, p. 144). The ancient dynasty was founded by Chandragupta, and Mr. Fleet thinks that the Gutta family, who called themselves Mahāmandalešearas in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were later offshoots of the same family. They were fendatories of the Western Chalukyas, and seem to have lived in Dhārwāḍ and Maisūr. Mr. Fleet notes inscriptions (1) of the reign of Vikramāditya VI of the Western Chalukyas (A.D. 1075-1126), (2) of A.D. 1179-80, (3) of A.D. 1181-82, (4) of A.D. 1187-88, (5) of A.D. 1191-92, (6) of A.D. 1213-14, (7) of A.D. 1237-38, and (8) of A.D. 1262-63, all of which mention chiefs of this Gutta family.

2. Nāṣir Jang, (1748–1750). Killed in 1750 by the Navāb of Cuddapah. 4. Salābat Jang, (1750-1761). Deposed in 1761 by Nizām 'Alī and murdered January 26th, 1763. 5. Nizām 'Alī Basālat Jang. Khān, Āsaf Jāh i Sānī, (1761-1803).

3. Muzasfar Jang, Hidāyat Muhī-ud-dīn. (Dec. 5th, 1750 to Jan. 30th, 1751). Grandson of Nizāmu'l-mulk by u daughter. Allied himself with Chanda Sāhib and fought against Nāṣir Jang. He was killed 1750 in a moment of triumph, leaving an infant son, who never came to power.

 Sikandar Shāh, (1803–1829).

7. Farkhundah 'Alt Khan, Nasiru'd-daulah, (1829-1857). Sir Salar Jang was made his Dewän in 1853.

8. Afzül-ud-daulah, (1857–1869). Sir Sälar Jang was his Dewän.

9. Mir Mahbūb 'Alī Khān Bahādur Fath Jang Nizāmu'd-daulah, Nizāmu'l-mulk (1869), the present Nizām. Sir Sāler Jang died 1882.

THE HOYSALA BALLALAS.

This was a dynasty that ruled over most part of the present Maisar territories from about the beginning of the eleventh till the beginning of the fourteenth century. They were probably feudatories of the Kalachuris, whom they succeeded on the downfall of that kingdom. The Musalman raids of 1310 A.D. caused the subversion of the family. The Ballalas were Yadavas by origin, and resided, during the time of their greatest power, at the old Yadava capital, Dvarasamudra (modern Halebidu). The founder of the family is by tradition called Sala or Hoysala, and in the Chenna Basacanna Kālajūdna he is given a long reign, from A.D. 984 to 1043; but it is possible that the name is mythical. Mr. Rice states that two inscriptions insert a son Kari between Sala and Vinayaditya, making Vinayaditya grandson of the former. Vinayaditya is the earliest authentic sovereign. The genealogy of the family is as follows:—

Vinayāditya.

Also called Tribhuvana Malla I. Married Keleyabbe, or Keleyaludevi. Inscriptions A.D. 1047, 1076. He was a feudatory of the Western Ckālukya Vikramāditya VI.

> Ereyanga or Ereganga, married Echaladevi.

Ballala I.
Married Padmaladevi, Chācalidevi, and Boppadevi. Inscription in A.D. 1103. Overcame the Santara king Jagaddeve. Vishnuvardhana.

Also called Bittideva, Bittiga, Tribhuvanamulla II, Bhujabalaganga, Viruganga, and Vikramaganga. Inscriptions A.D. 1117, 1137. Married Santaladevi. Took Talakād, the capital of the Gangas. He is said to have made many conquests. This is believed to be the socrecign who was converted to the worship of Vishnu by Rāmānujāchārya.

Narasimha I.

Also called Vira Narasimha or Vijaya Narasimha. Married
Echaladevi. A.D. 1142—1191.

Ballala II.
or Vīra Ballala. Married Padmalādevī.
Mr. Fleet limits the Inscriptions to A.D.
1192—1211. Defeated the Kāļachuris and assumed royal titles. Fought against Pāndiya, Choļa, &c.

Narasińha II. or Vira Narasińha. Was defeated by the Devagiri Yādavas, and lost much territory.
Inscription, A.D. 1223.

Someśwara.

Married Bijjaladevi and Somaladevi. Inscription of A.D. 1252. Resided at "Vikramapura," a place he had established "in the Chola country."

Udayāditya.

* Mr. Rice adds an inscription in A.D. 1039.

Narasimha III.

Inscriptions range from A.D. 1254 to 1286. Reigned at Dvārasamudra.

Ballala III. or Vira Ballaladeva. Reigned till the Musalman conquest of A.D. 1310.

In A.D. 1310 'Alāu'd-dīn, Emperor of Delhi, sent Malik Kāfur to reduce the Yādava kings of Dvārasamudra.¹ The invaders were completely successful. They destroyed the capital, sacked the temples, and subverted the dynasty. Ballāla seems to have been captured, but afterwards to have been released and allowed nominally to rule. This continued till A.D. 1326-1327, when a second Musalmān invasion completed the destruction of the kingdom. It appears, however, that princes of the dynasty continued, as might be expected, to claim a nominal dignity as heads of the family, for we read of the rebel Muhammadan Viceroy fleeing in A.D. 1337 to the Hoysala king at Tanūr for safety (he was delivered up and flayed alive by his sovereign), and in 1347 it seems that the Hoysala prince Ballāladeva of Dvārasamudra sent a contingent to help the great Hindu confederation that stemmed the torrent of Musalmān successes, and checked for two centuries their advance southwards.

IKKERI, KELADI, OR BEDNÜR, RAJAS OF .-

This was a principality in Maisur which lasted from A.D. 1560 to 1763, the capital being at Ikkeri. The chiefs do not appear to have been very powerful at any time.

In 1560 Sadāšiva Rāya of Vijayanagar is said to have conferred on a man of the Sūdra caste a small government, which the family held, increased, and finally usurped as their own. To the first chief the Vijayanagar sovereign gave his own name. This was Sadāšiva Nāyakka, eldest son of Basavappagauda.

The expedition is described by Amir Khusru in his Tdrikh-i 'Aldi (Sir H. Elliot's History of India, III, 80, &c.), and by Ziau-d-din Barni in the Tdrikh-i Ptroc Shahi (Id. 203).

(adopted)
12. Basavappa Nayakka,
A.D. 1698-1714. The ruling house was extinct. This prince was son of a Bednür (Biderüru) merchant of the Setti caste.

 Somašekhara Nāyakka, A.D. 1714-1740. Virabhadra.

 Buddhi Basavappa Nayakka, A.D. 1740-1753. Married Virammāji, who adopted a son, and, after the latter's death, another.

(adopted)

15. Chinna Basavanna Nāyakka, A.D. 1753-1755. He is supposed to have been murdered by his adoptive mother. 16. Somašekhara Nāyakka, A.D. 1755-1763. He and his adoptive mother were confined by Haidar 'Ali, and deposed.

In 1763 Haidar 'Alī seized the territories of this house, which thenceforth ceased to exist. No. 16 died without issue.

IMĀD SHĀHI DYNASTY OF BĪRĀR.

(See Dakhan, Muhammadan Kings of the ...)

JEYPORE RĀJAS.

The Rajas of Jeypore belong to an ancient family, but unfortunately dates and genealogical descent cannot be traced. The family chronicler i names a line of eighty-seven sovereigns, after whom came a prince named Vinayakadeva, who is said to have founded a new dynasty at Nandapuram, the ancient capital of Jeypore. Others believe this chief to have been a dignitary at the court of the Gajapatis of Orissa. The family are Rajputs of the lunar line. The following is the list of Rajas, kindly given me by Mr. P. W. Moore, C.S:—

Vināyakadeva. Vijayschandrakshayadeva. Bhairavadeva. Viávanāthadeva. Balaramadeva, Dasalnantadeva. B. Vikramadeva. B. Krishuadeva. Viávambaradeva. Malki Mardana Krishnadeva. Haridova. Balaramadeva. Raghunatha Krishnadova. Ramachandradeva. Balaramadeva. Višvambaradova.

Lala Krishnadeva. Ejected by force of arms by Sītārāma Rāja of Vizianagrum in A.D. 1760 in favour of his brother.

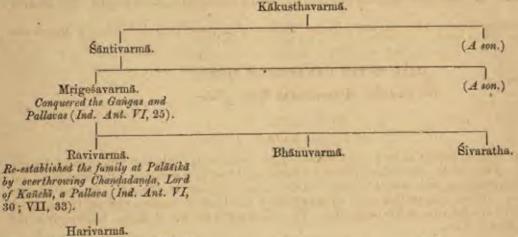

Vikramadeva. Installed by Sītārāma Rāja of Viziana-grum in A.D. 1760. Ceded much territory to the latter. Jeypore became tributary to Visianagrum.

Ramachandradeva. Vikramadeva. Ramachandradeva. (the present Maharaja). Vikramadeva.

KADAMBAS AND KADAMBAS, THE -.

In Mr. Fleet's recent publication "The Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts" he points out (pages 7-10, 84, &c.) that there were three families having similar names. The kings of the ancient dynasty called themselves Kadambas, while those of the two latter dynastics were styled Kadambas. These will be considered in order.

The ancient dynasty was that of the Kadambas of Palasika, or Halsi in Belgaum, and Vaijayanti or Banavasi in North Kanara. The various grants of this dynasty supply the following genealogy:-

An inscription of his reign mentions the Sendraka King, Bhanusakti.

In an inscription of Mrigesavarma's reign, his third year is called Pausha and his eighth Varsakha, while the years are divided, in the primitive method, into three seasons instead of four. Mr. Rice assigns the dates A.D. 538 to Kakustha, A.D. 570 to Mrigesa, and A.D. 600 to Bhanu. Mr. Fleet doubts the authenticity of the grant on which the first date is founded, and places these sovereigns at about the close of the fifth century A.D., anterior to the subjugation of the Kadambas by Kirttivarma I of the Chalukyas, whose date is A.D. 567.

The Devagiri grants mention a Krishnavarma and his son Devavarma, who may have been anterior or posterior to the above kings. Krishna's sister married the Ganga king Madhava II.

These Kadambas were, like the Chalukyas, of the Manavya gotra, "Sons of Hariti." 1 They were Next come the Kadambas of Banavasi and Hangal.

Mr. Fleet thinks that the difference in the name implies that the later chiefs cannot claim direct lineal descent from the Kadambas. Three lists of sovereigns are given. The first, by Wilson (Mackenzie

Collection I, ciii, enlarged by Mr. Lewis Rice in his Mysore and Coorg I, 193, &c.), relates to the founders of the dynasty and is probably purely mythical. The genealogy given stands as follows:—

Jayanta.
"Trilochana or Trinetra Kadamba."
Founder of the dynasty. Capital at Banavāsi.
Madhukešvara.
Mallinātha.
Chandravarmā.

Chandravarma.

Purandara.

Mayn'ravarmā.

Married Šašānkamudrā, daughter of Rāja Vallabha of Kalyānapura.

Introduced Brāhmans into his kingdom from the north.

Kshetravarmā.
"Chandragada" or "Trinetra Kadamba."

(Daughter.)
Kanakāvatī.
Married a kinsman, Lokāditya, son of Chandrasena, governor of Southern Tuluva. He murdered a chief in the Maisūr country and seized his territory.

The second list is given in a number of inscriptions, but there is nothing extant to prove its authenticity; and Mr. Fleet points out that a number of Rashtrakuta inscriptions show that at any rate up to A.D. 947 a family of Mahāmanḍaleśvaras of a different name preceded the Kadambas in the government of Banavāsi.

Mayüravarma I. Krishnavarmā. Nagavarma I. Vishnuvarmā. Mrigavarma. Satyavarma. Vijayayarmā. Jayavarmā I. Nagavarma II. Santivarma I. Kirttivarmā I. Adityavarma. Chattaya, Chatta or Chattuga. Jayavarmā II or Jayasimha.

From this point commences the third list, which is probably accurate. Mr. Fleet, however, states that the first historical name is that of Kirttivarma II.

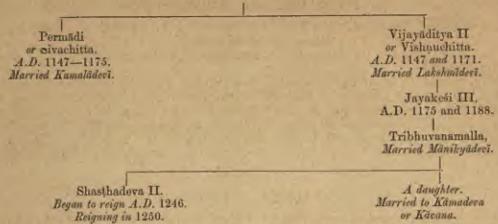

We hear in these inscriptions of a siege of Hangal by the Hoysala Ballalas in A.D. 1135, when King Vishnuvardhana wrested from the Kadambas for a time the provinces of Banavasi and Hangal. In A.D. 1196 the Hoysala king Ballala II besieged Hangal, but was repulsed by Kamadeva. Soon afterwards, Mr. Fleet thinks, Ballala II completely subjugated the Kadambas and annexed their territory, all that is known being that in A.D. 1203-4 Kamadeva was still struggling.

The Kādambas of Goa.—These belonged to a distinct family connected with the Banavasi Kadambas, but in a manner not yet known. They ruled at Goa and Halsi (Palāšikā). The genealogy is as follows:—

Is last heard of in A.D. 1203-4.

Shasthadeva I and Jayakesi I were feudatories of the Western Chalukyas. Vijayaditya I married Chattaladevi, sister of Bijjaladevi, the mother of Jagaddeva of the Santara family. Jayakesi II was also a feudatory of the Chalukyas, though at first he seems to have attempted to rid himself of their supremacy. He fought with the Sindas, and was for a time defeated. He was also defeated by the Hoysalas. Permadi and Vijayaditya II seem to have reigned conjointly. Mr. Fleet thinks that, at the death of Jayakesi III, the kingdom of the Kadambas of Goa was practically at an end, and that Shasthadeva II had very little real power.

KALACHURIS OR KALACHURYAS, THE -.

A dynasty of Katachchuris is mentioned in an inscription of Mangalisa of the early Chalukyas (A.D. 567—610), and Mr. Fleet (Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, pp. 10, 11) considers them to be the predecessors of the Kalachuris. Their king Buddha, son of Samkaragana, seems to have been conquered by Mangalisa.

With the more northern branch of the family, as described by Mr. Fleet, we have nothing to do in the Madras Presidency, but the existence of the southern branch was felt in its day. Mr. Fleet gives the following genealogy :-

Jogama.

Pormādi.

A.D. 1128. Feudatory of the Western Chālukya Sometvara III.

Bijjala.'
Feudatory of the Western Chālukyan Jagadekamalla II.
Cammander in-Chief of Taila III. (A.D. 1156—1167.)
Assumed royal titles about A.D. 1161-2. Established his power in the south of the Chālukyan dominions, including part of Maisūr, and eventually established himself of Kalyāna. Was murdered by the celebrated Basava, the Lingūyat, whose sister Padmāvatī he had married.

Siriyādevī. Married Chāvunda II of the Sindas of Erambarage.

Someśwara. A.D. 1067—1175. Also called Sovideva and Rāyamurāri. Sankama, A.D. 1175—1180. Āhavamalla, A.D. 1176 to 1188. Siàghana, A.D. 1183.

The three brothers were united in the government, but their power in the Chalukyan dominions had waned. An inscription of Ahacamallo's speaks of wars with the Cholas, the Hoysalas, and a Vijayāditya, possibly a Kādamba of Goa.

The Kalachuris were overthrown by Ballala II of the Hoysalas in, or soon after, A.D. 1183-4.

KALAHASTI, THE ZEMINDARI OF -.

This is an ancient Zemindari in the North Arcot District, but very little is known regarding the family to whom it belonged. They claim to have received their territory by grant from one of the two Pratapa Rudras of Orangal in the thirteenth century, who created Damarla Javi Raya (or Rayudu, Tel.),

In 1639, Damarla Venkatadri Nayudu, the then Polegar, gave the village of Chennakuppum to the English, who obtained a sanad for it from the Raja of Chandragiri, the expatriated prince of Vijayanagar. The Polegar stipulated that the new settlement was to be called "Chenna-pattanam" after his father Chennappa or Chennayya Nayudu. On the site so obtained, Mr. Day, the Superintendent of the Company's factory, built Fort St. George, and founded the city now called "Madras" by the English, but "Chennapatnam" by the natives of the country. (See Mr. Cox's Manual of North Arcot, p. 216.)

KALINGA, GANGAS OF ---

We have still a great deal to learn about the sovereigns and princes of Kalinga, for though it is certain that they were powerful and independent sovereigns at a very early stage of the history of Southern India, as yet we know nothing of their names. They governed the country south of Orissa and north of the Godavari. (See Mr. Foulkes's "Civilization of the Dakhan down to the Sixth Century B.C." in Ind. Ant. VIII, 1.)

The people and the reigning house of Kalinga are alluded to in the oldest extant chronicles of India and Ceylon, and were known equally to the classical writers of Greece and Rome and to the inhabitants of the far East. They appear to have been hardy and adventurous traders by sea to distant countries. The oldest Buddhist legends speak of the Kalinga monarchs as then rulers of a civilized

An ancient inscription 1 found at Chicacole in Ganjam gives the name of Nandaprabhanjanavarma, King of Kalinga, at a period probably previous to the Chalukyan conquest of Vengi at the beginning of the seventh century A.D. Like the Vengi kings, the sovereign was probably a Pallava by origin. His grant is dated from the city of Sarapalle.

Two other inscriptions of later date give the name of King Indravarma. His grants are dated from the city of Kalinganagara, in the years 128 and 146 of the "Victorious reign" (of the dynasty?).

Later on we come to the descendants of this Indravarma in the tenth century. After the Chalukyan conquest in the seventh century, we hear little or nothing of the Kalinga Gangas till about the year 977 A.D.3 At that period there ensued a period of anarchy in the Eastern Chalukyan territories which lasted for twenty-seven years at least, and the Kalinga princes again rose to power for a time at Kalinganagara. The following short genealogy is gathered from inscriptions of this period :-Jayavarmadeva.

> Anantavarmadeva (reigning in A.D. 985). Devendravarmadeva. Rajendravarmadeva. Satyavarmadeva.

Two inscriptions found at Chicacole 3 record grants made by Devendra and his son Satya in the same year, namely, the "fifty-first year of the reign of the Gangeya-ramsa," at Kalinganagara, and it would seem natural to suppose that they date from the commencement of the reign of some king (Jayavarma?) who re-established for a time the fortunes of the family. Another grant of Devendravarma is dated in the "254th year," but without stating the era. Here also the order is issued from the city of Kalinganagara. If pure conjecture may be allowed a place in a publication of this kind, I would note, as a possible explanation of these figures, that as the Kalinga country lay between the territories of Orissa and those of the Eastern Chalukyas, it is possible that the ancient family may have partially re-established themselves and founded a dynasty about the end of the seventh or beginning of the eighth century, when, seemingly, the Orissan kings lapsed into a condition of weak peacefulness for four and a half centuries (Stirling), but being afraid of their powerful neighbours on the south, they dared not assert any considerable independence till the period of anarchy in the Eastern Chālukyan dominions, which commenced about the year A.D. 977. The fifty-first year would then refer to the era of independence, the 254th to the original establishment of the dynasty.

On pp. 31-34 ante, I have noted a dynasty of kings professing to belong to the Ganga family, of whom a complete genealogy is given for three and a-half centuries, ending in A.D. 1119 with Chōdaganga alias Anantavarmadeva, whose father married a daughter of Rajendra Chola (A.D. 1064—1113). They seem to be unconnected with the Gangas mentioned above, and yet they claim to have ruled the Kalinga country during the whole of that long period. I can at present offer no explanation of this apparent confusion.

KĀRVĒTINAGARA, ZEMINDARS OF ...

Sir Walter Elliot (" Numismatic Gleanings," in the Madras Journal, No. VII., N.S., p. 96, Vol. XX, O.S.) states that from a "local history of some merit" he finds that the ancient possessors of the "Karvētinagaram" estate were a family of Salva Reddis, who migrated from the neighbourhood of Pittapuram in the delta of the Godavari, about the eighth or ninth century. One of them, Salva Narasa Reddi, obtained the favour of the last of the Eastern Chalukyas, Vimaladitya (A.D. 1016-1023),1 and was appointed chief of the country about Tirupati, where he founded a town called Narasapuram.

From the account that follows I obtain the following pedigree:-

Salva Narasa Reddi. 1st chief, about A.D. 1020, Salva Venkatapati Nayudu dispossessed by the Cholas.

Sālva Bhīma Nāyudu recovered his patrimony.2

Sālva Narasimha Nāyudu assumed independence after an inroad by the Chera (?) king Kirttivarmā whom he assisted. Ruled 35 years with much ability.

Salva Bhujanga Nayudu was reduced to subjection by the Western Chalukya king, Somewaradeva (I or II) and taken prisoner to Kalyana schere he died.

Recovered the estate.

In S.S. 1152 (A.D. 1230), it is said that the estates were curtailed to 24 villages by Rāja Rāja II of the Chola dynasty, but during the next four generations, as the power of the Cholas decayed, the fortunes of the Kārvēṭinagara family rose, and in S.S. 1236 (A.D. 1314) the chief was able to obtain as his son-in-law Prōli, or Prōlaya, Reddi, the first of the Kondavīdu Reddi dynasty. Shortly after this the family became feudatories of Vijayanagar, and remained so for about two hundred years, when the family became extinct and the present Bomma Rāzu family succeeded. The last of the old family was Seshāchala Reddi, who stipulated that his family-name should be retained. This is still done, the name Sālea being one of the titles of the present Zemindar.

The founder of the family, Narasa Reddi, was granted permission by his patron, the Chalukya, to use the royal seal and boar-signet of the Chalukyas, a proud distinction still kept up.

Mr. Cox (Manual of North Arcot, p. 222, etc.) gives an account of the origin and fortunes of the Bomma Razu family. Geddi Makha Razu and Boppa Razu, two scions of a family in the Northern Sarkars, travelled southwards, and were successful in beating off a band of robbers. The chief of Karvetinagara heard of this and sent for them. They took service under him, and Makha Razu eventually became his prime minister, and succeeded to the estate on the death of his patron without heirs (the widows becoming satis). Boppa Razu became his prime minister. The present Zemindar is descended from them.

The family profess to be pure Kshatriyas.

KIMEDI, ZEMINDARS OF ...

There are at present three estates in the Ganjam District, Parla Kimedi, Pedda Kimedi, and Chinna Kimedi. The Zemindars of these estates belong to the same family, which is of considerable antiquity and claims to be descended from the Keśari sovereigns of Orissa. It is impossible, however, to ascertain anything reliable regarding their origin, or the ancestry of the present chiefs of Pedda Kimedi or Chinna Kimedi. I append a list of the Parla Kimedi family as given to me by Mr. C. F. Macartie, C.S., who compiled it from the Zemindari records and believes it to be authentic.

KONDAVIDU, REDDI CHIEFS OF ...

Kondavidu is a strong hill-fortress in the Kistna District, south of the Krishna river and eight miles west of Guntur. After the subversion of the Ganapati Rajas of Orangal by the Muhammadans in A.D. 1323, the Reddi chiefs in different parts of the Eastern Coast rose to power. Amongst these the Kondavidu chiefs were, for a century, so important that their government rises to the dignity of a kingdom, and their family to that of a dynasty.

The succession is as follows :-

							A.D.
Põliya (Prõle, or Prõlaya)	Vēma	Reddi, s	on of I	onti Al	la Redd	i (?)	1328-1339
Ana Vēma Reddi		118.8					1339-1369
Aliya Vēma Reddi				-			1369-1381
Komaragiri Vēma Reddi		- (40)					1381-1395
Komati Venka Reddi							1395-1423
				* *	* *		1423-1427
Racha Venka Reddi	4 4	* *		* *		4.4	TTAO TTAI

The dynasty was overthrown by the Muhammadans in A.D. 1427.

Native tradition at Kondavidu states that Prolaya Vema Reddi was not connected with the family of Donti Alla Reddi, but was "a guest in his house." Alla Reddi is said to have lived at Dharanikota near Amaravati, and his family are stated to have "entered" that place in A.D. 1225. Prolaya Vema Reddi is said to have built (or rebuilt?) the "Puttakota" at Kondavidu. His daughter married one of the Salva Reddis of Karvetinagara.

Ana Vema Reddi rebuilt the Amarescara Temple at Amaravati, as is proved by an inscription Komāragiri Vēma Reddi has a bad character for unpopularity.

Native tradition makes Racha Venka Reddi brother of Komati Venka Reddi.

HISTORY OF THE RULERS OF KONDAVIDU FROM NATIVE SOURCES.

Several Telugu chronicles are extant, which profess to give an account of the history of Kondavidu, the ruins of the forts and temples of which are extensive.

The following is an abstract of one, by repute the most authentic of them, which is held in high estimation among the educated natives of that part of the country. It is so accurate in the main (though the dates are sometimes wrong) that I consider it very necessary that it should be examined in detail, as several assertions are made in it referring to events hitherto unknown or little known to English writers.

The history commences with a Gajapati Rāja from Orissa named Viśvambaradeva, who ruled twelve years and built the first fort or Puttakōta.1 He had four sons, Ganapatideva, Bala Bhaskaradeva, Hariharadeva, and Viśvambaradeva. Ganapatideva gave a village away in charity in S.S. 1067 (A.D. 1145). He "gave up his government" to Kākatīya Rudradeva.

During the period of 100 years after the Gajapati sovereignty, the Reddi chiefs began to grow into importance, and an inscription proves that in S.S. 1147 (A.D. 1225) one Donti Alla Reddi was in possession of the fort of Dharanikōta, close to Amaravati on the river. Subsequently Prolaya Vema Reddi, a member of Alla Reddi's family, acquired power, defeated the officers of Kakatiya Pratapa Rudra at Dharanikëta, proclaimed himself independent, came to Kondavidu, and rebuilt the Puttakoja. He ruled from S.S. 1242—1253 (A.D. 1320—1331).

Then follows an account of the Reddi dynasty corresponding with that given above.

¹ Mr. Boawell in his report to Government printed with G.O. of 7th November 1870, reprinted in the Indian Antiquary (I, 182), says that the Puttaketa at Kondavidu was built by "Odiya sovereigns when they held this part of the country."

¹ This would imply a conquest of this country from the Gajapatis by the Orangal Ganapatis a few years (?) subsequent to 2 This remains to be proved; also that the Gajapatis conquered the Chola sovereigns of Kalinga previous to that date. A.D. 1145. This remains to be proved; also that the Gajapatis conquered the Cholas lost Kalinga in A.D. 1228 (South Indian Pelacography, At present we know nothing of this. Dr. Barnell states that the Cholas lost Kalinga in A.D. 1228 (South Indian Pelacography, At present we know that they gained it in A.D. 1023. It has always been supposed that they held it undisturbed during those p. 40), and we know that they gained it in A.D. 1023. It has always been supposed that they held it undisturbed during those two centuries. I learn from a paper in the "Anatic Researches" (XV, 269) that Ananga Bhimadeva, the Gajapati King of Orissa, two centuries. I learn from a paper in the "Anatic Researches" (XV, 269) that Ananga Bhimadeva, the Gajapati King of Orissa, two centuries of his kingdom from Chicacole to Rajahmundry, built the new temple of Jaganatite's in honour theorem. According to Stirling the reign of this king commenced in 1174 A.D. Hunter makes the date 1175, and the writer of the above article places it in 1196. This would make the date of the conquest in question previous either to 1186, to 1187, or to 1208 A.D.
³ See above, p. 174. It is very possible that this defeat occurred as stated. Pratapa Rudra II was completely defeated by the Muhammadans in A.D. 1323.

Ignoring the Muhammadan chiefs the Hindu historians pass on to Langula Gajapati, who succeeded the Reddi sovereign Racha Venka Reddi. He is said to have ruled from S.S. 1342-1353 (A.D. 1420

This Gajapati was followed by two sovereigns of the Anegundi family, (i.e., the Vijayanagar dynasty) whose names were Pratapadeva and Hariharadeva. They reigned respectively seven and fifteen years, viz., from 1431 to 1454 A.D.2

This history then gives us another Gajapati named Kapilesvara as having conquered Harihara, and we have the following genealogy :-

> Kapilesvara Gajapati,* 27 years, A.D. 1454-1461.

Srī Vīra Pratāpa Purushottama Gajapati, 35 years, A.D. 1461-1496.
In 1479 (S.S. 1411, "Kilaka"). This king exempted the people of Konducidu from taxation, as is testified to by an inscription.

> Pratapa Rudra Gajapati, 1 year, A.D. 1496-1497.

Vîrabhadra Gajapati, 18 years, A.D. 1497-1515.

Virabhadra was defeated by Krishnadeva Raya of Vijayanagar in A.D. 1515, who marched up from the south (Udayagiri, etc.), carrying all the fortresses that lay on his march.4 After his conquest, Krishnadeva Raya went to Orissa and married the Orissa Gajapati's daughter.

He left as Governor of Kondavidu a nephew of Salva Timmarasu, by name Nadendla Göpamantri. Krishnadeva Raya built a temple at Kondavidu and had an inscription engraved on a slab in S.S. 1443

(A.D. 1521).

Achyuta's reign is mentioned. He is said to have been succeeded by his minister Ramayya Bhaskarudu. He it was who murdered the 72 chiefs of the Reddis at Kondavidu. (See Boswell's Report, Indian Antiquary I, 183.) During the reign of Sadašiva Raya at Vijayanagar, the Governor at Kondavidu was Vithaladeva, son of Murti Raja, who was son of Kandanavoli Rama Raja.

Sadasiva's reign was followed by a Muhammadan conquest.3

Tirumaladeva of the Vijayanagar family collected a large army and drove the Musalmans across the Krishna, fairly reconquering all the country south of that river. He left as Governor of Kondavidu one Ranga Rajayyadeva, his son. This Governor in S.S. 1494 (A.D. 1572) granted a village to a temple. Tirumaladeva ruled till S.S. 1496 (A.D. 1574) and was succeeded by Sri Rangadeva, who in 8 S. 1499 (A.D. 1577) granted another village to a temple. In his reign Ibrahîm Padshâh (Ibrahîm Qutb Shâh of Golkonda) sent a force under a Brahman, Râya Râu (a Mahratta?) who seized the Palnad country and the country about Kurnool and Nellore, and finally attacked Kondavidu, the Governor of which place, being bribed, treacherously surrendered it in S.S. 1502 (A.D. 1580).

Here the history closes, but it ends with a mysterious statement that "afterwards Pratapa Rudra governed 2,219 villages of the Kondavidu country." (!)

* As I remarked before, the dates of this history are not accurate, though very nearly so. It is quite possible that about this time the Vijayanagar sovereigns seized the country about Kondavidu, and they may have left members of their family as governors of the territory; but at present I am not aware of any information which we possess to confirm the fact.

* These Gajapati sovereigns belong to the Orissan dynasty (see p. 204). Dr. Hunter gives Kapilendradava 27 years (A.D. 1452—1479); Purushottamandeva 35 years, 1479—1504; Pratapa Rudra 28 years, 1604—1632. The Orissan chronicle credits Purushottama with a conquest of Kafichipuram, and Pratapa Rudra with still more extended conquests.

* An inscription at Conjecterum (Chingleput District Manual, 435-6) states that Krishpadova Raya conquered the northern fortresses, including Kondavidu, and defeated several chiefs, amongst whom was Vtrachandra Raja, son of Pratapa Rudra Gajapati, and Narahari Raja, son of Virabhadra Gajapati; while two inscriptions at Udayagiri declare that Krishpadava Raya, gave some lands to temples in S.S. 1436 (A.D. 1514), after having defeated Pratapa Rudra Gajapati and taken prisoner his uncle Tirumalappa Raya. An inscription at Vijayanagar records that Krishpadava Raya returned in triumph to his capital after the completion of the war with Udayagiri in S.S. 1435 (A.D. 1513). An inscription at Mangalagiri (Guntor Taluk, Kistna District) states that Kondavida was captured by Krishpadava Raya in S.S. 1437 (A.D. 1516), or rather by his general, Timma.

* This is, of course, correct. It took place A.D. 1564.

* This would be the king of Vijayanagar, Sri Ranga I.

KONGU OR GANGA KINGS, THE -.

As before stated (p. 153), the Chera and Kongu dynasties are still far from being clearly worked out. Neither the localities to which their rule was confined nor the dates to which they must be assigned are at all certain. Some writers consider the names as simply interchangeable; some think that the Cheras preceded the Ganga kings of the Kongu country, while the Rev. Mr. Foulkes (Salem District Manual) has entirely separated them. This is not the place to discuss the question, and I shall content myself with a brief summary. We know that in the oldest historical period, from the third century B.C., the ruling powers of the south were called Cheras, Cholas, and Pandiyans, the Pandiyans being in the extreme south and south-east, the Cholas north of them, and the Cheras partly to the north of the Pandiyans and partly along the western coast down to the extreme south of the peninsula. The junction of the three kingdoms is by tradition placed at the Karaipōṭṭānār, a small river running into the Kaveri eleven miles east of Karūr, which, in Ptolemy's time, appears to have been the capital of the Cheras (Κάρουρα, βασιλειου Κηροβόθρου. Geog. Lib. VII, cap. I, § 86). Chera is supposed to be synonymous with Kerala, and there seems to be little doubt that the supposition is correct. In later times there is some confusion because we have a very definite account of a long dynasty of Ganga or Kongu kings reigning over at least the northern part of what was formerly called Chera, their territory being called Kongudesa. Up to the present, on the authority of the Markara copper-plates, the dynasty has been believed to have lasted from the beginning of the Christian era down to the year A.D. 894, about which time it was overthrown by the Cholas. We are now, however, told by Mr. Fleet (Dynastics of the Kanarese Districts, pp. 11-14) that the Markara plates are forgeries, and that so far from being thrown back to the beginning of the Christian era, the brother of the third king (Harivarma) of the true Ganga dynasty (or Kongu) gave a grant in A.D. 968 (Ind. Ant. VII, 101—112). From him down to the last king of the line are seventeen names. We know that the Hoysala Ballalas conquered the Kongudeśa in A.D. 1080, and it is a question, therefore, whether these seventeen kings ruled in the intervening 112 years. If so, the reigns would be short, but this is more easy of credence than that they enjoyed such abnormally long life as must be attributed to them if the Markara plates and the dates given in the lists already published are to be received.

With this preface I proceed to give a list of the first seven kings of the Kongu country, of the solar race, who, it is very possible, we may have hereafter to recognize as true Cheras. The list is taken from Dr. Burgess's paper in the Indian Antiquary (I, 360), which followed Professor Dowson's abstract from the Kongudeśa Rājākkaļ (J.R.A.S. VIII, pp. 2—6, "On the Chera Kingdom of Ancient

See also the plate published by Mr. Lewis Rice at p. 138 of Dr. Gustav Oppert's issue of the Madras Journal for 1878. See also the translation by Taylor in M.J.L.S., XIV, 1.

He was installed at Skandapura. He is stated, in an inscription, to have conquered "Chola, Pandiya, Kerala and Malayalam" (the distinction is significant), and to have governed the Karnataka country as well as Kongudeśa; but as the inscription, though dated A.D. 178, also adds that the king was converted from the Jaina to the Saiva faith by Sankaracharyar, its authenticity may well be questioned. The mention of the Saiva reformer would bring the king's date nearer to us by several centuries; but no theory can be built on an inscription tainted with the suspicion of forgery.

The above seven kings are the earliest known sovereigns of the Kongu country. Following them (so far as we know at present) came the kings of the Ganga dynasty. They belonged to a different family altogether. According to the Markara plates, they date from the commencement of our era, but, as above stated, Mr. Fleet has shown strong reason for doubting the authenticity of these plates, and has published (Ind. Ant. VII, 101—112) inscriptions at Lakshmeśvara in Dharwad, from which we gather that the first king Konganivarma must have ruled about the beginning of the tenth century A.D. I therefore omit the dates usually assigned to these kings as being doubtful. The list is taken from Mr. Foulkes' paper in the Salem District Manual, with added notes.

 Konganivarmā Rāya I, or Mādhava I, of the Kaneāyana family of the Jāhnavī or Gangā race. He was enthroned at Skandapura,

2. Mādhava II.

 Harivarınā.
 Enthroned at Skandapura, but lived at Daļavanpura in Karņāţakadeša.

4. Vishnugopavarmā.

Enthroned at Dalavanpura. He conquered " the East Country."

Kulatti, or Parikulatti Rāya, of the family of Mādhava III.

Marasimha,

or Satyavākya.

(Adopted)
5. Madhava III.
Had to resign his crown in favour of a son subsequently born to Vishnugopa.

6. Krishnavarmā. Enthroned at Daļavanpura.

8. Kongani Mahadhi Raya II.

A daughter.

9. Dhruvaniti Rāya,
Avinīta or Duvvinīta.
Ruled over Kongudeša and Kurnātakadeša. Is said to have conquered all the kings of the peninsula. He was called "Dharma Virodhi" or "Punyavirodhi," the "Unjust King."

7. Dindikara Rāya, alias Harischandradeva Rāya. Succeeded Krishnosarmā, but was deposed by the latter's minister, who raised (8) Kongani Mahādhi Kāya II to the throne.

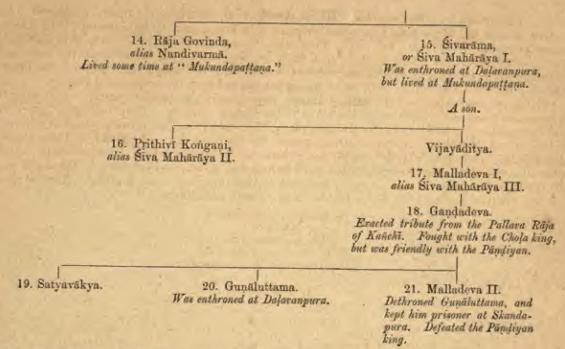

Mushkara Raya, or Brahmahatya Raya.
 He resumed a number of grants made to Brahmans.

11. Tiruvikrama, or Šrī Vikrama.

12. Bhūvikrama. Called "Gajapati" from the number of his war elephants.

Vallabha, or Šrī Vallabhākya, alias Vilanda. His brother's Commander-in-Chief. Another account makes him younger brother of Kongani III.

13. Kongani III, alias Navakāma. Made extensive conquests of tributary kingdoms which had withheld payment.

There is still a good deal of confusion about some of these sovereigns. The above list is from the Kongudeśa Rājākkal, but the extant inscriptions "without exception" (Mr. Foulkes, Salem District Manual, p. 25), while confirming the pedigree from Kongani I, call Mādhava III son, instead of adopted son, of Vishnugopa, and state that Kongani II was son of Mādhava III. They ignore the existence of Krishnavarmā, Dindikara Rāya, and Krishnavarmā's sister. There are other differences also, some of which are pointed out by Mr. Foulkes, who has gone very closely into the question of this dynasty (id., pp. 23—39). I do not propose to devote much space to the subject in consideration of the doubts raised by Mr. Fleet.

Seeing that the conquest by the Hoysala Ballalas in A.D. 1080 seems a well-established fact, and that a Chola conquest of the same Kongu country previous to that date seems equally certain, we must be very cautious in our dealing with the dates of the dynasty. The Ballala conqueror chose Dalavanpura (Talkad) as his capital.

Mr. Rice considers that the chief who established the Ganga line of kings in Orissa in 1132 A.D. was a member of the Kongu family, but I think this is far from certain. There was a dynasty of Gangas in Kalinga who might equally have founded that dynasty or it might have been founded, even, by a Chola prince (see above, p. 158). The Ganga family in Maisūr was by no means exterminated at the time of their overthrow. They remained with some local power, probably as subordinate chieftains, till the complete subversion of the country by the Vijayanagar kings. In the sixteenth century, after the sovereigns of Vijayanagar had been driven from their capital by the Muhammadans, a Ganga Raja rose to power in the south of Maisūr and established a principality at Śivasamudra, the island at the falls of the Kaveri, about twelve miles north-east of Talkad. He was succeeded by Nandi Raja, and he by Ganga Raja II, with whom the line came to a tragic end early in the seventeenth century under highly romantic circumstances.<sup>2</sup>

The kings of this dynasty are known in their grants by the appellation Mahādhi Rāya.

KULBARGA, BAHMANI DYNASTY OF ...

(See "Dakhan, Muhammadan Kings of the ... ")

Wilson (Mockensie MSS. I, 198) gives the name Adityavarma as that of the Chola conqueror. Mr. Rice states that the Gangas were driven out of their country by Rajendra Chola. As this king's reign lay between the years A.D. 1064 and 1713, the Chola occupation, if it took place in his reign, must have been of very short duration.
Mr. Rice in his "Mysore Inscriptions" (p. lxviii) gives an account of this event.

MAHRATTAS. THE DYNASTY OF TANJORE.

Tanjore was annexed in 1857.

MAISŪR RĀJAS.

The account given by tradition of the origin of the family of the Rajas of Maisur is that two young brothers of the Yadava tribe, dependants at the court of the Vijayanagar kings, having left that court on an adventurous expedition to the south, rescued from an enforced marriage with the chief of Karugahalli in Maisur, whom they slew, the daughter of the chief of Hadanad. The elder of them, by name Vijaya, at once married the rescued damsel and thus became lord (or Udaiyar) of Hadanad and Karugahalli.

The following table is taken partly from Wilks and partly from Mr. Rice's "Mysore and Coorg,"

I, 240, &c.

* "Six-fingered."

2 Wilks (I, 22) thinks that it was after this partition that the village of "Pooragurry" (Paragere) received the new name of Mahisha-Gru, or as he, probably erroneously, puts it, Mahisha-Gru. Mahisha-Gru = Maisha was the name of the Assers or demon whom Durga slew: Gru = "town" or "village." Mahisha-Gru = Maisha.

With Chama Raja ends the old line of kings, and a disturbed period of anarchy follows, during which the Muhammadans gradually gained the upper hand, while maintaining a puppet sovereign chosen almost at random from various branches of the royal family. Chikka or Immadi Krishna Raja of Kenchengod, a member of a distant branch, was put on the throne in 1784 and died in 1766, being nominally succeeded by his son Chama Raja, who died childless in 1775. Chama Raja, son of Devaraja Arasu of Arkotar, a member of the Karugahalli family, was then selected at random by Haidar, who had usurped the government. He died in 1796. But the real rulers during this period were :-

MALAYALAM COUNTRY, RULERS OF ...

Very little is as yet known regarding the rulers of the fertile country west of the Western Ghats. Its history has yet to be written. There is abundant evidence of a very extensive commerce between the people of the Malabar and Kanarese Coast and the inhabitants of Western Asia and Europe in olden days, but beyond a few isolated facts, no connected story has come down to us. And there is little hope of the tale ever being clearly told, for the few remaining inscriptions in that tract are eminently unhistorical in character. The following sketch is an abstract of the Keralolpati, or native account of Kerala, written by Tunchattu Ramanuja, alias Raman Eluthatham.

In ancient days, when the kings of the earth, of the Kshatriya caste, had grieved the majesty of heaven by their violence and wickedness, Vishnu became incarnate as Parasu Rāma, and went about slaying the sinful sovereigns and destroying their dynasties. He determined to create a new country, and recovering Malayalam (Malai-ala, "hills and waves") from the sea, he peopled it with Brahmans from other lands. But serpents swarmed in the new tract, and the settlers fled back to their own homes. Then Parasu Rama brought down the Brahmans of sixty-four villages from the Arya country in the north and settled them in sixty-four villages along the whole coast. Thirty-six thousand Brahmans 2 belonging to fourteen villages took up arms for the defence of their territory, and amongst them twelve chiefs were appointed. For the propitiation of the serpents, naga-worship was ordained, and temples of the gods were erected. Then the Brahmans who had fled returned, and were called "Tulu-Brahmans," or "Payan Tuluvas." Parasu Rāma instituted charms for the propitiation of devils, portioned out temple services amongst different villages and families, and ordained hereditary descent in the line of the mother.5 He also introduced Sudras from neighbouring countries.

After some time, the inhabitants fell out amongst themselves, and required a governor. Parasu Rama, therefore, selected four villages, and the people consented, first to a joint government of four Brahman chiefs from these four villages, and afterwards to the government of a single chief from one of these four, in turn, each for three years.6 In those days one-sixth of the produce was paid to the governor. Many years thus passed.

But these governors oppressed the people, and the latter at last determined to dispense altogether with native rulers. They therefore brought in a foreigner, one Kêya Perumal from Kêyapuram; and made him ruler for twelve years. "He was named Chēramān (or Keraļan) Perumāl, king of Malai-nād just as Chola Perumāl governed Chola, and Pāṇḍi (or Kulašekhara) Perumāl governed Pāṇḍya." 8

2 Called Vil-nambis, "armed half-Brahmans." (Gundert.)

It still obtains largely.

Also " gold-dus, was scattered in the soil, gold fanams were coined, and treasures were buried in the ground." All old custors in the Malayalam country are referred back to Parain Rives.

Thus originated the Malayalam custom of twelve years' rulers.

No clue in given as to the locality of this place.

See Dr. Burgess's note on the Perumals in Ind. Ant. IX, 77.

1. Kêya Perumal was thus the first Chēramān Perumāl. His power was limited, the sixty-four villages constituting a powerful democracy and checking all attempts at independence. His capital was at Allur. He built a palace at Talayur. He reigned 12 years.

2. Chola Perumal was then appointed.2 He built a palace called Cholakkara. He reigned 10 years and 2 months, and retired to Chola.

3. Pandi Perumal was next crowned at Paramba, where he erected a fort. He ruled 9 years, and retired to the Pandiyan country.

4. Another Chola Perumal was brought, who ruled 12 years. After him-5. Kulasekhara Perumal, the great Pandiyan, came to the throne of Kerala.

At this point the story seems to break off, and commence again at a period "when the Kali age was a little advanced." And we are again brought up to the reign of Kulasekhara Perumal, but with a totally different set of kings. These confusions are not uncommon in these native legends.

1. "When the Kali age was a little advanced" the Brahmans of Malayalam brought "from Banapuram in Para-desa" a Perumal named Bana-Perumal. He became a Buddhist, but, after a great disputation in which the Brahmans were victorious, he banished the Buddhists and was reconverted to the Brahman religion. Nevertheless he was excommunicated and "went to Mecca" after reigning for four years.

2. Tuluban Perumal, from the north, was the next Perumal. He lived at Kötisvara and named the country about there the Tulu-nad. He reigned 6 years and died.

Indra Perumal succeeded, reigned 12 years at Allar, and went back to Para-desa.
 Arya Perumal was then brought from Aryapuram. He divided Kerala into four divisions, i.e.:

i. Tulu-rej, from Gôkarna to the Perum-pura * river.

ii. Mūshika, or Kupa, Rāj from the Perum-pura to Pudu-pattan.5

iii. Kerala Raj, from Pudu-pattan to Kannetti."

iv. Kupa, or Mūshika Rāj, from Kannetti to Cape Comorin. He died after a reign

5. Kundan Perumal was brought from Para-deśa. He built a palace near Kannetti, and retired to his own country after a reign of 4 years.

6. Kotti Perumal reigned for a year and died.

7. Mata Perumal reigned 11 years and died. He was succeeded by his younger brother,-

8. Eri Perumal, who reigned 12 years and retired after building a fort.

9. Kompon Perumal succeeded. He lived in a tent on the bank of the Neytara river for 31

10. Vijayan Perumal came next. He built the fort of Vijayan-Kollam. He reigned 12 years years, and died.

11. Vallabha Perumai succeeded. He discovered a lingam, and built a shrine over it on the banks and retired. of the Neytara river, and a fort. He reigned 11 years and died.

12. Harischandra Perumal. He built a fort on the Purali Hills and lived therein in solitude, "and was no more heard of."

Mallan Perumal succeeded. He reigned 12 years and retired.

"The Perumal who succeeded was Kulasekhara Perumal" of the Pandiyan kingdom. His reign is given more in detail, with the reforms he introduced. He introduced some Kshatriyas into the country. He procured two celebrated teachers, on payment, to teach the Brahmans of the country, and established a college at the place now called Tirukannapuram. This Perumal reigned 18 years and ascended to heaven "with his body." The year of the Kali is given as "Tiru-vañcha-kuṭam," and it is said to correspond with A.D. 333.

After this there was a government by a democracy, and, like the government, the so-called "history" lapses into wild confusion for a space. Probably there was a period of anarchy, during which the <sup>1</sup> The commencement of his reign is said to have taken place in A.D. 216. Another version states that he lived only 5 years and a meature, when he died.

The constant requirence of Chola and Pandiyan Perumals will be noticed. It will be an interesting subject of inquiry for the future historian to accertain whether Pandiyan and Chola history corroborates these assertions.
There is a confusion in the different versions as to these divisions.

According to the former list the date of the close of this Perumal's reign would be A.D. 277. But the dates are probably now called Koilandi. entirely fictitious and must not be for a moment depended on.

country was split up into factions. The story states that the country was governed by a popular assembly, by whom judges were appointed. At last an assembly took place at which the representatives of the people expressed themselves dissatisfied with the form of government, and they determined to "ask Anagundi Krishna Raya (!) to send a person to govern them, and he accordingly sent a Kshatriya, Cheraman Perumal, to rule over Kerala."

Cheraman Perumal therefore came to the throne. One version says that he succeeded "after the reigns of Adi-Perumal and Pandi-Perumal, who were sent, were over." The Brahmans made him an absolute monarch, without restriction, and he governed so well for 12 years that they appointed him ruler for a further similar period, and again for a third. Krishna Raya 1 prepared to attack Malayalam. The Pandiyan king also fortified his territory. Cheraman attacked the Raya's forts but was unsuccessful. A second attack was successful, under the command of two young men, brothers, who led the army.

After this, Sankaracharyar was born. He wrote the history of Kerala, and made fresh improvements in the condition of the Brahmans, making stringent regulations, which are fully detailed. His reforms were promulgated at a great council.

The manuscript here goes back to the time of Cheraman Perumal, and describes the conclusion of his reign. He is said to have given up the throne and gone on a pilgrinnage to Mecca "in company with the Bauddhas."3 The limits of the Malayalam country are described, and the neighbouring kingdoms are said to be Pandiya, Kongu, Tulu, Wainad, Punnad. (The last is a tract of Maisur, and was ruled by a race of Kshatriyas of whom we have inscriptions.) He divided the Malayalam country into eighteen divisions, constituting their chiefs and making regulations. He gave his sword to the ancestor of the present Zamorin of Calicut. (Chêraman Perumal's departure for Mecca is said by some to have occurred in A.D. 350. (Gundert's Dictionary.) He sailed from Dharmapatnam, or Calient. After residing some time at Jeddah he died. Before his death, however, he persuaded an Arab chief to sail for the Malabar Coast with a number of followers in order to establish a Mahammadan colony and convert the inhabitants to that religion. They did so, and mosques were built. Eleven are named.

After some period had elapsed 5 (duration not mentioned), one of the Malayalam chiefs, Kunnala Konettiri, waged war against his neighbour, the Porallattiri chief, and defeated him. The Zamorin made Menokki ruler of Porallatiri and came to terms with the troops and people.

After this follows an account of the founding of the town of Calicut, close to the Zamorin's palace at Tali, by a merchant who had amassed a great fortune in trade with Mecca. Afterwards, while Puntura Kon was Zamorin, one Koya, a foreigner, settled at the town, which was named after him Koyikkötu (Calicut). Koya assisted the Zamorin in his attainment of increased power.

Shortly after this the Portuguese came to Calicut.

It is unnecessary to continue the sketch further. The Kerajolpati is a very fair specimen of a native attempt at history. It may contain germs of truth, and it certainly embodies a number of senttered traditions, but in the attempt to weave these into a connected story the author is signally unsuccessful.

with them to China after four years' reign.

The author of the "History of Travancore" states that this last Charaman Perumal's name was Bhaskara Ravivarna, and that he was one of the sovereigns who signed the grant to the Jews of Cochin. According to Dr. Burnell this would be in the <sup>3</sup> This is generally believed to mark the close of a monarchy and the commencement of government by a Brahmanical aristocracy, the country being divided. The natives call it the period of the Tamburan Rajas.

Of course this is an absurd anachronism. It is said by some writers to be an interpolation.
The real date of Sahkaracharyar is about 050 to 700 A.D. (Dr. Burnell's South Indian Palacography, p. 37, and note 4. Also his "Samoridbana Brahmana," Vol. I, Pref., p. ii. n.) He flourished 800 years before "Anagundi Krishna Rayar," or Krishnadeva Raya of Vijayanagar.
Other accounts relate that he died. Pachu Mutata, in his Keraja-rifesha-mahhātanya, gives a full account of the fables. He states that Bana Perunal (see above, 2nd List, No. 1) was converted to Buddhism by Buddhist priests from China, and that he went with them to (him, after four years) usion.

"The first inscription . . . that gives us any extensive insight into the early history of these parts (the Northern Kanarese Districts and the Western Dakhau) is a stone tablet at the Meguti temple at Aihole, the ancient Ayyavole or Aryapura in the Kaladgi District. It is of the time of the Western Chalukya king Pulikesi II, and is dated Saka 556 (A.D. 634-5). From it we learn that at the time of the advent of the Chalukyas, the dominant families in this part of the country, whom one by one the Chalukyas subjugated and dispossessed, were the Nalas, the Mauryas, the Kadambas, the Mâtangas, and the Katachchuris . . . " (Mr. Fleet's "Dynasties of the Kanurese Districts," pp. 5, 6.)

They are mentioned in an earlier inscription of Mangalisa (A.D. 567-8-610). Mr. Fleet writes (id., p. 10): "Mātanga means 'a Chāndāla, a man of the lowest caste, an outcaste, a Kirata mountaineer, a barbarian'; and the Mādigas... usually call themselves Mātangi-makkaļu, i.e., 'the children of Mātangi or Durgā,' who is their goddess. It is probable, therefore, that the Mātangas of this inscription were some aboriginal family of but little real power, and not of sufficient importance to have left any records of themselves."

MAURYAS.

"The Nalas and the Mauryas are mentioned in connection with Kirttivarmā I, who was the father of Pulikesi II, and whose reign terminated in Saka 489 (A.D. 567-8). . . . . Of the Mauryas, all the information that we have, furnished in the same inscription, is that they were a reigning family in the Konkana. . . . . . . . It is not at all improbable that their capital was the Puri, or 'the city, the goddess of the fortunes of the western ocean,' which is mentioned in the verse immediately following that in which their subjugation is recorded, and that this is the same town as the Puri which, in the eleventh century A.D., was the capital of the Silāhāras of the Konkana. These Mauryas were perhaps descendants of the Maurya dynasty of Pātaliputra, which was founded by Chandragupta, the Sandrocottus of the Greeks, in the fourth century B.C., and of descendants of which we seem to have some still more recent traces in Western India in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries A.D. in the Mahāmandalesvaras or great feudatory nobles of the Gutta family, or the lineage of Chandragupta, whose inscriptions are found at and in the neighbourhood of Chandradāmpur in the Dhārwād District, and at Halebid in Maisur, and who were feudatories of the Western Chālukya Kings and their successors." (Mr. Fleet's "Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts," pp. 6, 7.)

NALAS.

(See above under Matangas.)

We hear of the Nalas as a nation or tribe opposed to the Chalukyas in the reign of Kirttivarma I, i.e., before A.D. 566; and they are mentioned again in an inscription of Jayasimha III (A.D. 1018—1040) of the Western Chālukyas (Ind. Ant., Vol. VIII, 10), but only as a traditional foe of that sovereign's ancestors. Beyond this, nothing, I believe, is known of them. (Mr. Fleet's "Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts," p. 6.)

NAYAKKAS OF MADURA.

The previous history of the ancient kingdom of the Pandiyans, of which Madura was the capital, will be found under the head of the "Pandiyans." Madura fell finally into the hands of the Nayakka Generals of Vijayanagar in 1559 A.D., who speedily constituted themselves into an independent dynasty, acknowledging, however, the Rajas of Vijayanagar as their suzerains. The following is the genealogy of the family:—

In 1736 the Musalmans got possession of the kingdom of Madura.

(1731-1736).

I now proceed to give a rough sketch of the reigns of these princes. For full particulars Mr. Nelson's "Madura Country; A Manual" should be referred to. All that follows is taken from it.

1. Visvanātha Nāvakka (1559—1563).—Either during or after the government of the three Nāyakkas who ruled Madura after the year 1558 (see below, p. 224) a Pāndiyan prince, Chandrašekhara Pāndiyan was placed on the throne, but the Chola king of Tanjore, Vīrašekhara, made war and seized the Pandiyan kingdom. Chandrašekhara fled to Vijayanagar, and the pseudo-Rāya, Rāma Rāja, actīng for the real Rāya, Sadāšīva, in captivity, sent a general, by name Kōṭiya Nāgama Nāyakka, to drive out the Cholas. He did so and got possession of Madura, but instead of putting the Pandiyan king on the throne he began to administer the country for himself. The Raya, indignant, sent an army under Nagama's own son, Visvanatha, to reduce the rebel. Visvanatha defeated Nagama, took him prisoner, and proceeded to govern the country. Arya Nayakka Mudaliyar, alias Aryanatha, the builder of the thousand-pillared mandapam in Madura, and a justly celebrated man, came to Madura with Visvanatha and gave him great assistance. Visvanatha nominally placed Chandrasekhara Pandiyan on the throne, but really governed for himself. He made Aryanatha his commander-in-chief and prime minister under the title of Dalacay. The country was wisely governed, fortifications were carried on, temples rebuilt, channels dug, villages erected, and cultivation extended even as far north as the Trichinopoly fort, then belonging to Tanjore. Visvanatha induced the Tanjore Raja to exchange Trichinopoly for Vallam, and thus the former became part of the kingdom of Madura. Its rock was fortified, and improved communications were opened.

Soon after this, Aryanatha, who had gone to settle the Tinnevelly country, found himself successfully opposed by five chiefs, who called themselves the "five Pandavas," and who seem to have possessed considerable power in the south. Visvanatha, therefore, went south to the aid of his general, but in vain. It is said that Visvanatha, finding his armies unable to effect the conquest of his enemies, challenged the five chiefs to a personal contest, five to one, on condition that the defeated party should retire from the contest. They accepted, but chivalrously demanded that only one of their number should represent them. In the combat which ensued, Visvanatha killed his man, and the four survivors honorably carried out their promise and left the country. The Nayakka was therefore left undisputed chief of the south. He gave Palaigams to seventy-two chiefs by way of settling the country. Visvanatha died December 1563, and his son succeeded.

2. Kumāra Krishnappa (1563—1573). The Poligar Dambiehchi Nayakka revolted at a time when Aryanatha was away north looking after some refractory Musalmans, but the insurrection was quelled and the rebel chief killed.

Aryanatha appears to have been the real ruler of the country. Several new public works were carried out, and some temples and villages were built.

It is alleged-but the story wants proof-that Kumara Krishnappa invaded Ceylon and defeated the Kandian troops; that in a second battle which took place, the king of Kandi in person led his troops, but was killed and his army defeated; and that Kumara Krishnappa then seized Kandi, and established his own brother-in-law as governor there. He died 1573.

3. Krishnappa (or Periva Virappa) and Visvanātha II.—Joint rulers (1573—1595). These were sons of Kumara Krishnappa. They were enthroned by Aryanatha, and were entirely under his control. A rebellion by a chief styled the "Mahavilivana Raja," probably a Pandiyan, was quelled. The brothers governed jointly. They strengthened Trichinopoly and Chidambaram. Probably Visvanatha II died first, for on Krishnappa's death in 1595 the latter's two sons succeeded.

4. LINGAYYA (OF KUMĀRA KRISHŅAPPA II) and VISVAPPA (OF VISVANĀTHA III).—Joint rulers (1595-1602). During the reign of these brothers the country flourished. Aryanatha died 1600.

Višvanātha probably died before his brother. Lingayya died 1602.

His uncle, Kasturi Rangayya, seized the government, but was murdered after a week, and Lingayya's son, Muttu Krishnappa, obtained the throne.

5. MUTTU KRISHNAPPA (1602-1609) .- He re-established the ancient Marava dynasty of the Setupati chiefs of Ramnad (see below, p. 227). Christianity spread largely in the country, taught by the great Jesuit Missionaries headed by Robert de Nobilibus, who arrived at Madura in 1606, and proclaimed himself to be a celebrated Sanyani from Rome. Muttu Krishnappa died in 1609, leaving three sons, Muttu Virappa, Tirumala, and Kumara Muttu.1

6. MUTTU VIRAPPA (1609-1628).—In his reign there was a small war with Tanjore, and some slight unimportant incursions of predatory bands from Maisur. The spread of Christianity was checked.

He resided at Trichinopoly.

7. TIRUMALA NAYAKKA (1623-1659).—This is the great Tirumala, otherwise called "Maharaja-Manya-Raja-Sri Tirumala Sevari Nayani Ayyalu Garu." He left Trichinopoly for Madura and took up his permanent residence there. The great temples and palaces at Madura were built. He determined to shake off the Vijayanagar yoke and become independent. An invasion by armies from Maisur was stopped at Dindigul by the Dalavay Ramappayya, who pursued the enemy into Maisur and stormed one of their principal fortresses. Robert De Nobilibus reappeared at Madura in 1623. Then ensued a war in the Ramnad country with the Setupati, in which Tirumala was not very successful. In spite of his desires for independence Tirumala had always acknowledged the supremacy of the Rayas of Vijayanagar, and used to send presents to his suzerain. But in 1657 his want of loyalty seems to have become known, for on the death of the then Raya, his son declared war against Tirumala. Tirumala was joined by the Nayakkas of Tanjore and Ginji. The Raya marched on Ginji, but the Musalmans, at Tirumala's suggestion, invaded the territories of Vijayanagar, and in the war which ensued greatly extended their conquests. They then turned against the Raya's southern tributaries, and Tirumala had to flee to Madura. The Muhammadans invaded him there and the capital was surrendered without a blow. Tirumala then made an alliance with the Muhammadans of Golkonda, who ravaged Maisur and the remaining territories of Vijayanagar. In revenge for his treacherous conduct the Udaiyar of Maisur attacked Tirumala and a vindictive war followed, closing, after varied fortunes, with a victory on the side of Madura in 1659. Tirumala died the same year.

There is a strong probability that he was foully murdered by the Brahmans. Mr. Nelson narrates the various legends of his death (pp. 139, 142).

Tirumala was supposed to have had a strong leaning to Christianity.

Kumara Muttu, the rightful heir, was some how induced to waive his claims, and the illegitimate son of Tirumala, Muttu Arakadri, succeeded.

8. MUTTE ABAKADRI OF MUTTE VIRAPPA (1659-1660).—He determined to rid the country of the Muhammadans, and accordingly fortified Trichinopoly very strongly. The Muhammadans seized Tanjore and other places, and eventually besieged Trichinopoly. But their attack failed and they retired. The Nayakka died in 1660 and was succeeded by his son,-

9. CHOKKANĀTHA, alias CHOKKALINGA, alias CHOKKAPPA (1660—1677, 1678—1682).—He was sixteen years old when he came to the throne, and unfortunately fell into the hands of unscrupulous ministers who tried to dethrone him, but the young prince outwitted them, himself seized the government, and put himself at the head of his army. The traitors fled to Tanjore. He besieged them there and defeated them. The Tanjore Nayakka submitted. In 1663-64 another Muhammadan invasion occurred, signalized by an unsuccessful attack on Trichinopoly and by fearful massacres of innocent villagers. Chokkanatha then marched against the Tanjore Nayakka Vijaya Raghava, in revenge for his having assisted the Muhammadans, and the latter was defeated and reduced to submission. Not long after this Chokkanatha made an unsuccessful attack on his vassal, the Setupati, who had rebelled. In 1674 Tanjore was again invaded, reduced, and Raja Vijaya Raghava slain with almost all his family. The romantic story of his gallant death will be found in Mr. Nelson's work, pp. 191, 193. Alagiri Nayakka was made Governor of Tanjore. In 1675 Chokkanatha married Mangammal, who afterwards became famous in history and gave himself up to private enjoyments, living at Trichinopoly and neglecting the government which was carried on by his brother Muttu Arakadri. The ministers soon began to intrigue with Arakadri at Madura and they at last induced the latter to declare his independence. At the same time, the Muhammadans in alliance with Ekōjī (the Mahratta, half brother of the great Sivājī) and with a refugee Tanjore prince, descended on Tanjore and seized it. They then seized almost all the Madura territory, Chokkanatha being quite given up to lethargy. This was in 1676 (?)1 At last he roused himself and prepared to attack the Muhammadans in Tanjore. The King of Maisūr also made preparations for an attack on Madura, and Šivajī made a terrible raid to the south, but was stopped by floods in the Coleroon and compelled to return. During his absence the Muhammadans of Tanjore attacked Sivaji's general, who was left in charge of Ginji and the country around, but were defeated. Chokkanatha then advanced to Tanjore, but either from terror or sheer lethargy remained inactive. Sivaji's armies safely returned to garrison the city and Chokkanatha returned to Trichinopoly. Sivaji fortified Ginji, and settled in Vellore. In 1677 the Raja of Maisur invaded Madura, and the ministers dethroned and imprisoned Chokkanatha. They set up in his place his brother-

10. MUTTU LINGAPPA (1677).—This prince, however, only reigned a few months when he was deposed and Chokkanatha restored. Chokkanatha remained very subservient to Muhammadan influence. In 1680 the armies of Maisur invested Trichinopoly, and other of the Nayakka's enemies pressed in to attack him, so that at one period no less than four armies surrounded Trichinopoly-(1) Maisur, (2) the Maravas of Ramnad, (3) the Mahrattas, and (4) the Tanjore Muhammadans. The Maravas and the Muhammadans remained inactive. The Mahrattas attacked and utterly defeated the troops of Maisur under the walls of the city, and, flushed with victory, seized the whole country round. In a few days Chokkanatha, bereft of all his possessions except Trichinopoly, died broken hearted. He was succeeded by his son -

11. Ranga Krishna Muttu Vīrappa (1682—1689).—The whole country was now in a state of anarchy. Ēkōjī, now chief of Tanjore, seized and sequestered all the temple property and lands. Sivāji was succeeded in Giñji by his son Sambujī, a tyrant. The territories of Madura were split up into fragments and actually shared by five powers—(1) The Nāyakka, (2) Maisūr, (3) The Rāmnād Setupati, (4) Šambujī of Giñji, (5) Ēkōjī of Tanjore. Slowly things got better and the Nāyakka of Madura got more and more free from Maisūr, while he recovered possession of the capital and recovered the lands seized by the Setupati. The other powers were distracted by local dissensions and rebellions. The Nāyakka governed well and energetically. In 1686 the Setupati rebelled against Madura, and his troops, aided by Tanjore, were successful; but the war was not pursued. Shortly afterwards the Nāyakka died of small-pox. His widow, Muttammāl, gave birth to a posthumous son, and then killed herself.

Recency of Mangammal, Chokkanatha's widow (1688—1704).—Mangammal was charitable but unscrapulous. She protected all religions, Christian as well as Hindu. In 1693 the Setupati of Ramnad tortured and put to death the Jesuit Priest DeBritto. In 1698 Mangammal's army, going to collect tribute from Travancore, was defeated there. It is said that she therefore declared war against Travancore and was victorious, but the statement requires corroboration. The Dutch of Tuticorin, in 1700, acquired the monopoly of the pearl fisheries from the Nayakka. Desultory war with Tanjore (1700). Bouchet, the priest, was very well received at court. Some Tanjore cavalry being very trouble-some, the Madura Dalavay Narasappayya defeated them when they were in disorder, and ravaged the territory of Tanjore completely. The Tanjore minister, however, bought off the Madura troops. In 1701 Madura and Tanjore combined against Maisar, but war was averted. The Dalavay Narasappayya was defeated and killed in a battle against the Setupati in 1702. The young Nayakka prince proved against Maisar, the Mangammal she was starred to death became of age (1704 or 1705), and a party being formed against Mangammal she was starred to death be came of age (1704 or 1705), and a party being formed against Mangammal, she was starved to death. 12. Vidaya Ranga Chokkanātha (1704—1731).—There was a terrible famine and a fearful flood in 1709, and another famine in 1710. It continued for ten years, only ceasing in 1720. In that year the Puduköttai Tondamān revolted against his liege lord the Setupati of Ramnad, who, on the march against his rebellious vassal, died, and a struggle ensued for the Ramnad musnud. It ended in one of the claimants being killed and the other enthroned (see below, p. 230). He reigned till 1729, and was then defeated, carried to Tanjore, and imprisoned. The territory of Ramnad was divided, Tanjore taking part and part being given to one of the successful rivals of the late Setupati. This was the Sivaganga territory. The remainder was left under his other rival, who became Setupati. The Nayakka died in 1731 without issue.

Minākshi (1731-1736).—Vijaya Ranga Chokkanātha's widow, Minākshi, adopted the son of Vangāru Tirumala, who, however, laid claim to the throne as of right. His faction made an attempt to kill the Rāni at Trichinopoly, but were defeated. In 1734 the Muhammadans under Safdar 'Ali Khān ravaged the country, as well as Tanjore, Travancore, and the Western Coast. Vangāru Tirumala induced Safdar 'Ali to make a fictitious award declaring him king. This was done and Chandā Sāhib was left to enforce it. The Rānī was frightened and bought over Chandā Sāhib for an enormous sum to her side, and Vangāru Tirumala retired to Madura. Chandā Sāhib also retired, but returned in 1736, and the Rānī placed herself entirely in his hands. He sent troops against Vangāru Tirumala at Dindigul and Madura. They were victorious and entered Madura, Vangāru Tirumala fleeing to Sivaganga. Madura now being in the hands of Chandā Sāhib, he seized the sovereignty, and Minākshi killed herself in despair.

This event put an end for ever to the Hindu Government of Madura.

Chandā Ṣāḥib remained in possession, and Vangāru Tirumala, too weak to do anything himself, called in the Satāra Mahrattas to his aid. In 1739, therefore, Rāghujī Bhonslē marched with an immense force to Madura. The Muḥammadans were defeated with great slaughter and Dost 'Alī, father of Ṣafdar 'Alī, was killed. The Mahrattas then besieged Trichinopoly, stormed it, and took Chandā Ṣāḥib prisoner to Satāra (1741). The kingdom of Madura was thus left in a state of anarchy.

CONCLUDING SCENES.

Morari Rau was left in charge of Trichinopoly by the Mahrattas (1741), while another Mahratta chief administered the State of Madura. In 1743 the whole was yielded up to the Nizam on his invasion. The Nizam extended his protection to Vangaru Tirumala, but the latter was shortly afterwards poisoned. His son returned to Madura, but never attempted to regain the throne. In 1748 Muhammad 'Ali seized

Trichinopoly and proclaimed himself Navab of Arcot. Chanda Sahib made war on him with the help of the French, Muhammad'Ali making an alliance with the English. Chanda Şahib was victorious (1751). Muhammad 'Ali attempted to gain possession of Madura, and the English tried to storm the place, but were unsuccessful. The Madura chief, however, sold the city to Maisur, and the English under Captain Cope returned and took possession. They were driven out by troops from Ramnad, and the Setupati placed on the throne of Madura the young adopted son of Rani Minakshi (1753). There was complete confusion for two years. In 1755 Muhammad 'Ali sent another expedition against Madura, with the help of some English troops. The city was given up on their arrival, and garrisoned with Europeans, a Muhammadan being installed as Governor. Much confusion followed, ending in 1758 in the English obtaining permanent possession of Madura. A desultory war with refractory Polegars and Kallans ensued. In 1760 Haidar 'Ali made an attempt on Madura and Tinnevelly, but it was unsuccessful. Muhammad Yusuf, the Governor of Madura, exacted tribute from the Polegars and from Travancore, and overran Ramnad and Sivaganga. But as he kept all the tribute for himself and paid nothing to the English or to Muhammad 'All, his chief, he was seized and hanged for treason (1763). Another Muhammadan was placed in charge, with English officers to watch and help him. This went on till 1772. Then ensued the invasion of the Carnatic by Haidar (1780) and the revolt of the Polegars. In 1783 Colonel Fullarton marched down, quieted the whole country, and finally subjugated it. It was thereafter administered solely by the English. Mr. McLeod was appointed "Collector of Madura" in 1790, and ever since then the country has remained an English possession.

ORISSA, KINGS OF ...

The following list is taken in extense from Dr. W. W. Hunter's "Orissa," Appendix vii. The dates must not be relied on, those for the earlier portion at least being purely tabulous, and the whole professedly depending on native chronicles, about the most unsound basis imaginable. I give the list simply as it stands, and because I happen to know of no other. Dr. Hunter himself states that the chronicle, being taken from Hindu sources, does not truly represent the facts of Orissan history after the Musalman conquest in 1568. The chronicle is based on the palm-leaf records of the Jagannatha temple (Dr. Hunter's "Orissa," Vol. I, p. 199) as digested in the Purushottama Chandrika by Babu Bhabanicharan Bandopadhyaya, collated with Mr. Stirling's Essay in the Asiatic Researches, Vol. XV (Ed. 1825), and his posthumous paper in the Bengal Asiatic Society's Journal, Vol. VI, Part II, 1837. I have not attempted to correct the spelling.

B.C.

"3101—3089. Yudusserris, a monarch of the Mahābhārata, of the lunar race of Delhi. Reigned 12 years. [According to Stirling (Asiatic Researches, Vol. XV), 3095—3083 B.C.]

"3089 2358. Parikshit, a monarch of the Mahabharata, of the lunar race of Delhi. Reigned

731 years. (According to Stirling, 3083—2326 B.C.)

"2358—1807. Janmejava, a monarch of the Mahābhārata, and the patron of that work; sprung from the lunar race of Delhi. Reigned 551 years. (According to Stirling, 2326—1810 B.C.)

B.C.

"1807-1407. SANKAR DEVA. Reigned 400 years. (According to Stirling, 1810-1400 B.C.) "1407—1037. GAUTAM DEVA. Extended the Kingdom of Orissa to the Godavari river. Reigned 370 years. (According to Stirling, 1400—1027 B.C.)

"1037- 822. MAHENDRA DEVA. Founded the town of Rajmahendri (Rajahmundry) as his capital.

Reigned 215 years. (According to Stirling, 1027-812 B.C.)

"822—688. Ishta Deva. Reigned 134 years. (According to Stirling, 812—678 B.C.)
"688—538. Sevak Deva. Reigned 150 years. (According to Stirling, 678—528 B.C.)

"538- 421. Bajra Deva. In this reign Orissa was invaded by Yavanas from Marwar, from Delhi, and from Babul Des-the last supposed to be Iran (Persia) and Cabul. According to the palm-leaf chronicle the invaders were repulsed. Reigned 117

years. (According to Stirling, 528-421 B.C.)

"421- 306. NARSINGH DEVA. Reigned 115 years. Another chief from the far north invaded the country during this reign, but he was defeated, and the Orissa prince reduced a great part of the Delhi Kingdom. The monarch excavated the tank at Dantan near Jaleswar, which exists at this day. (According to Stirling, this prince was called Sarasankha, and reigned 421-306 B.C.)

"306—184. Mankrishna Deva. Reigned 122 years. Yavanas from Kashmir invaded the country, but were driven back after many battles. (According to Stirling, this king was called Hansa, and reigned 306—184 B.C.)

"184- 57. Bhoj Deva; a great prince, who drove back a Yavana invasion, and is said to have subdued all India. Reigned 127 years. (Stirling's date here coincides with that of the palm-leaf record. . . . .)

"B.C. 57 to A.D. 78. Two reigns, that of Vikeamaditya and his brother Sakaditya. Neither the Purushottama Chandrikă nor Stirling give separate dates for these reigns, but the two extended over 135 years. Vikramaditya made himself master of all India, but was slain by a rebel conqueror from Southern India, named Sālivāhan, identified as his brother Sakāditya, who succeeded him. The current or Sakābda era dates from the end of this reign, 77-78 A.D. During the above fourteen reigns 3179 (or, according to Stirling, 3173) years of the Kali Yug elapsed.

A.D.

"78- 143. Karmarjit Deva; reigned 65 years.

"143- 194. Hatkeswar Deva; reigned 51 years, "194- 237. Bir Bhuvan Deva; reigned 43 years. (According to Stirling, the name of this prince was Tribhuyan.)

" 237— 282. NIRMAL DEVA; reigned 45 years. "282- 319. BHIM DEVA; reigned 37 years.

"319— 323. Sobhan Deva. During this reign of 4 years, the maritime invasion and conquest of Orissa by the Yavanas under Red-Arm (Rakta Bāhu) took place. The king fled with the sacred image of Jagannath, and with those of his brother and sister, Balbhadra and Subhadra, and buried them in a cave at Sonpur. . . . . The lawful prince perished in the jungle, and the Yavanas ruled in his stead. (According to Stirling, the reign commenced 318 A.D.)

"323- 328. Chandra Deva, who, however, was only a nominal king, as the Yavanas were completely masters of the country. They put him to death in A.D. 328,

(Stirling calls this prince Indra Deva.)

"328- 474. Yavana occupation of Orissa, 146 years. (According to Stirling, these Yavanas were Buddhists.) . . .

"474- 526. YAYATI KESARI, who expelled the Yavanas and founded the Kesari or Lion dynasty. Reigned 52 years. This prince brought back the image of Jagannath to Puri, and commenced the temple-city to Siva at Bhuvaneswar. His capital was at Jajpur. (According to Stirling, he reigned from 473 to 520 A.D.)
"526— 583. SÜRIYA KESARI; reigned 57 years.
"583— 623. Ananta Kesari; reigned 40 years. (According to Stirling, this and the previous reign extended from 520 to 617 A.D.)

A.D.

"623— 677. Alabu Kesari, who completed the temple of Bhuvaneswar, reigned 54 years.

(According to Stirling, he was called Lalat Indra Kesari, and began to reign 617

A.D.)

With the exception of five kings, Stirling does not give the names of the other monarchs of the Kesari dynasty from Lalat Indra Kesari to the extinction of the line. He merely says that thirty-two uninteresting reigns followed, extending over a period of 455 years. The Palm-Leaf Records, however, give the names of forty princes. Only three of the five kings referred to by Stirling can be identified in the list.

"677—693. KANAK KESARI; reigned 16 years.

"693 — 701. Bir Kesari; reigned 8 years.

"701— 706. Padma Kesari; reigned 5 years.
"706— 715. Briddha Kesari; reigned 9 years.

"715— 726. Bata Kesari; reigned 11 years.
"726— 738. Gaja Kesari; reigned 12 years.
"738— 740. Basanta Kesari; reigned 2 years.

"754— 763. Janmejaya Kesari; reigned 14 years.
"754— 763. Janmejaya Kesari; reigned 9 years.

"763— 778. Bharat Kesari; reigned 15 years.
"778— 792. Kali Kesari; reigned 14 years.
"792— 811. Kamal Kesari; reigned 19 years.

"811- 829. Kundal Kesari; reigned 18 years; built the temple of Markandeswar in Puri.

"829—846. Chandra Kesari; reigned 17 years.

"846—865. Bir Chandra Kesari; reigned 19 years.

"865—875. Amrita Kesari; reigned 10 years.

"875—890. Vijaya Kesari; reigned 15 years.

"890- 904. Chandrapal Kesari; reigned 14 years. "904- 920. Madhusudan Kesari; reigned 16 years.

"920— 930. Dharma Kesart; reigned 10 years." 930— 941. Jana Kesart; reigned 11 years.

"941— 953. Neipa Kesari. A warlike and ambitious prince, who founded the city of Cattack. Reigned 12 years. (Stirling dates the foundation of Cattack by this prince in 989 A.D.)

"953—961. Makar Kesari constructed a long and massive stone revetment to protect the city of Cattack from inundation. Reigned 8 years. (Stirling calls this prince Markat Kesari, and places the construction of this work in 1006 A.D.)

"961- 971. TRIPURA KESARI; reigned 10 years.

"971—989. Madhay Kesari; (according to Stirling) built the fortress of Sarangarh on the south bank of the Kätjuri river, opposite the city of Cattack; reigned 18 years.

"989—999. Gobinda Kesari; reigned 10 years. "999—1013. Nritya Kesari; reigned 14 years. "1013—1024. Narsinh Kesari; reigned 11 years. "1024—1034. Kurma Kesari; reigned 10 years.

"1034-1050. Marsya Kesari; built the great bridge across the Atharanala, at the entrance to Puri, existing to this day; reigned 16 years.

"1050—1065. Baraha Kesari; reigned 15 years.
"1065—1078. Baman Kesari; reigned 13 years.
"1078—1080. Parasu Kesari; reigned 2 years.
"1080—1092. Chandra Kesari; reigned 12 years.
"1092—1099. Sujan Kesari; reigned 7 years.

"1099-1104. Salini Kesari; reigned 5 years. His queen built the Nat Mandir or Dancing Hall of the temple of Bhuvaneswar.

"1104-1107. Puranjan Kesari; reigned 3 years. "1107-1119. Vishnu Kesari; reigned 12 years. "1119-1123. Indra Kesari; reigned 4 years.

"1123—1132. Suvarna Kesari; reigned 9 years. The Kesari dynasty ended with this prince, who died childless, and was succeeded by Chorganga, a king from the south....Another Palm-Leaf Record, containing a list of the kings of Orissa, and kept by a Brahman family of Purī, gives a different account of the extinction of the line. It states that Basudeva Bahampati, a powerful officer of the Orissa Court, having been driven from the royal presence, went to the Carnatic, and instigated Chorganga of that country to invade Orissa, which he did, conquering Cattack, and establishing a new dynasty. (According to Stirling, thirty-six princes of the Kesari line ruled over Orissa, 473—1131 A.D., of whom, however, he only gives the names of nine. One of these, Barujya Kesari, is said to have quadrupled the land-tax, and another, Surajya Kesari, to have reduced it to the old rate.)

"1132—1152. Chorganga, the founder of the Gangavansa dynasty; reigned 20 years. His memory is preserved by the name of a quarter in Puri city, called the Churang Sai, and also by a tank in that town bearing the same name. (Stirling places this reign 1131—1151 A.D.)

"1152—1166. Gangeswar.—His territories are said to have extended from the Ganges to the Godávari, and to have included five royal cities, Jájpur, Chaudwar, Amaravati, Chatna, and Biranasi, or Cattack. As a penance for a crime, he excavated a splendid tank called Kausalya Ganga, between Pippli and Khurdha. (According to Stirling, he ascended the throne 1151 A.D.)

"1166—1171, Ekjatakam Deva; reigned 5 years. "1171—1175. Madan Mahadeva; reigned 4 years.

"1175—1202. Anang Bhim Deo, one of the greatest of the Orissa kings. He made a survey of his whole kingdom, measuring it with reeds; and built the present temple of Jagannath. Reigned 27 years. (According to Stirling, he ascended the throne in 1174 A.D.)

"1202—1237. RAJRAJESWAE DEVA; reigned 35 years. (Stirling places his death in 1236 A.D.)
"1237—1282. LANGULIYA NARSINH; reigned 45 years; built the great Sun Temple at Kanarak on the sea. (The Black Pagoda.)

"1282—1307. Kesaei Narsinh; reigned 25 years. This prince filled up the bed of the river Balagandi, which ran between the temple and the country-house of Jagannath, and which obstructed the cars that carried the idols at the great festival. Previously a double set of cars had been required for the conveyance of the images.

(According to Stirling, this prince was called Kabir Narsingh, and creeted the bridge across the Atharanala at the entrance to Puri; the bridge which the Temple Records ascribe to Matsya Kesari, who reigned 1024—1050.)

"1307—1327. Pratab Narsinh; reigned 20 years. "1327—1329. Gatikanta Narsinh; reigned 2 years.

"1329—1330. Kapil Narsinh; reigned 1 year.
"1330—1337. Sankha Bhasur; reigned 7 years.
"1337—1361. Sankha Basudeva; reigned 24 years.
"1361—1382. Bali Basudeva; reigned 22 years.

"1382—1401. BIR BASUDEVA; reigned 19 years. "1401—1414. KALI BASUDEVA; reigned 13 years.

"1414-1429. NENGATANTA BASUDEVA; reigned 15 years.

"1429-1452. Netra Basudeva; reigned 23 years.

"1452—1479. Kapilendra Deva, originally a common herd-boy, tending the flocks of his Brahman master, but afterwards raised to the throne. Reigned 27 years.

Who was this Chorganga? Granting that the dates of this Orissan chronology are not quite certain, a certain liberty may be allowed us in selecting. Nothing can be considered reliable as yet, but we know of a traditionary son of Kulettunga I of the Choladyrasty, by name Sarangadham, while Chorganga of Orissa appears to be known also as Sarangadham, while Chorganga of Orissa appears to be known also as Sarangadham, Kulettunga I died in A.D. 1113. Two copper-plate inscriptions from the Kalinga country (Nos. 213 and 219 of the List of Copper-plates given above, pp. 31, 33) mention grants made by "Anantavarma Chola Gangadeva," or "Chodaganga shas Anantavarmadeva," whose abbishesh took place in A.D. 1077, and who was alive in A.D. 1119. Whoever he was, this Orissan Chorganga certainly came from the south. Mr. Rice thinks that Chorganga was one of the Kongu line, but I think this is doubtful, or at any rate that as yet there is no proof.

Dinakarasyami Tevar.

I append extracts from the notes on the Setupatis, kindly sent to me by the manager of the estate, T. Raja Rama Rau Avargal. Mr. Nelson, in writing his "Madura Country," was indebted, it seems, to another native in high official position in Ramnad for the statements he makes. And it must, therefore, be strongly pointed out that this list should be accepted with reservation. I do not know the authority on which my informant rests his assertions, nor does Mr. Nelson supply this vital deficiency. Dr. Burgess, who is at work at the inscriptions in the Ramnad country, tells me that he believes the dates to be erroneous.

"It is observed that at the beginning of the sixteenth century there was no Setupati in existence. The cultivation had become very limited. Thick jungles had sprung up in every direction. The roads were infested with gangs of robbers. Every village was under a petty ruler, who acted with free independence and oppressed and harassed the pilgrims who resorted to Ramesvaram. Muttu Krishnappa, the then ruler of Madura, was earnestly exhorted by the pilgrims to appoint a ruler, whose authority could conduce to their safe travel to and from Ramesvaram. Further, there was also the cessation of revenue collection from these petty chiefs to be attended to. Muttu Krishnappa therefore thought it expedient to re-establish the ancient Marava dynasty of the Setupatis or the Guardians of Ramesvaram.1 Accordingly he had Sadayaka Tevar, a descendant of the ancient Setupati, crowned at Pogalür, a village ten miles to the west of Ramnad, in the year 1604. He was further created chief of the seventy-two Polegars. It is from this period that we have got some authentic history of the Setupatis."

1. Sadayaka Tevar Udaiyan Setupati (1604—1621).—" He amply satisfied the expectations of. Muttu Krishnappa, to whom an annual tribute was sent. Peace was restored to the country. Cultivation was encouraged. The towns of Ramnad and Pogalar were fortified and improved. He further made some conquests by subduing the important villages of Vadakku-vaṭṭagai, Kalaiyarkōvil and Pattamangalam. After a useful reign of seventeen years this prince died in 1621. His son, Kuttan Setupati, succeeded him."

2. KÜTTAN SETUPATI (1621—1635).—" This prince quietly enjoyed the fruits of his father's labour. The country was prosperous and peaceful during the fourteen years that he ruled over it. He died in 1635, leaving his brother Sadayaka Tevar to succeed him. He left a sister named Gangai Nachchiyar." (Mr. Nelson's "Madura Country," p. 128.)

3. Sadayaka Tevar alias Dalayay Setupati (1635—1645).—"Nothing of importance transpired during the first three years of this prince's reign. But in the fourth year the prince announced his intention of appointing his adopted son, Raghunātha Tēvar, as his successor. This disclosure enraged his illegitimate brother, Tambi Tevar, who ruled over Kālaiyārkōvil as governor. Tambi was not inactive. He gained over to his side the King of Madura, who, besides creating him "Tambi Setupati," supplied him with funds and forces to dethrone the prince. Ramnad fell into the hands of the King of Madura's forces, and the Dalavay Setupati retreated to Pamban, where he was finally defeated and taken captive. He was sent to Madura and thrown into a dungeon, "Tambi had now a very difficult task before him. The Dalavay Setupati's nephews, Raghunatha Tevar and Narayana Tevar, were in arms against him, and at last, finding no one to be friend him among the relatives of the Setupati, Tambi was obliged to flee to the court of Madura." Tirumalai Nayakka, however, now discovered his mistake, and in order to quiet the country released the Dalavay Setupati and restored him.

"The Setupati was set at liberty to the satisfaction of all parties in 1640. After his restoration he reigned for four or five years in peace, when he was murdered in cold blood by Tambi Tevar in 1645,

"Then followed anarchy and confusion at Rāmnād. The principal Marava chiefs were preparing for war: but this was opportunely averted by the interference of Tirumalai Nāyakka, who partitioned the Rāmnād kingdom into three portions in 1646. Raghunātha Tēvar, the nephew of the Dalaväy Setupati, was placed on the hereditary throne of the Ramnad Setupati. His brothers, Tanaka Tevar and Narayana Tevar, were made to rule jointly at Tiruvadanai. Sivagangai was placed under the sover-eignty of Tambi Tevar."

4. RAGHUNĀTHA SETUPATI alias TIRUMALAI SETUPATI (1645—1670).—" This Setupati's reign was remarkable for territorial aggrandisement. The partitioned countries became again incorporated owing to the early deaths of Tanaka Tevar and Tambi Tevar. When Tambi Tevar was alive, the Setupati, in alliance with him, defeated the forces of Tanjore in a pitched battle, and the Setupati annexed the towns of Mannarkövil, Pettukköttai, Devakottai, Arundangi and Tiruvalur.

"At this time the King of Maisur invaded Madura, and, at the request of the King of Madura, the Setupati went in command of a large army and defeated the enemy in two very severely contested engagements. The King of Madura, in gratitude for the services rendered, ceded to the Setupati the villages of Tiruppavanam, Tiruchulai and Pallimadai. On the whole this Setupati became very powerful. It was he who introduced the celebration of the Navaratri festival at Ramnad. After a quiet and beneficent reign of thirty years he died in 1670, leaving his nephew Raja Surya Tevar to succeed him."

Mr. Raja Rama Ran omits to notice that this Setupati refused to aid his suzerain against the Muhammadan invasion, and that, consequently, the Nayakka invaded his territories to punish him for treason (op. cit. p. 187). The war was conducted with varying fortunes and seems to have died a natural death. The Setupati joined in the war, which ended in the downfall of the Nayakkas of Tanjore and the sack of the city, but according to Mr. Nelson, the Marava army was little more than a marauding mob.

5. SERYA TEVAR (1670).—This Setupati compromised himself in some way in the Tanjore war, and was seized shortly after his accession by Venkata Krishnappa, the Madura Dalavay, and was imprisoned at Trichinopoly, where he was secretly put to death.

"Surya Tevar left no immediate heir to succeed him. Consequently the task of nominating a successor devolved on the principal Marava chiefs, who came to no definite understanding. For a time the country was without a Setupati, but Attana, and after him Chandrappa Servaikaran, managed the affairs of the kingdom. Finally Raghunatha Tevar Kilavan, illegitimate son of the last Setupati, was installed."

6. RAGHUNĀTHA TĒVAR KILAVAN SETUPATI (1673-1708).-" The reign of this ruler was very remarkable for several important events. The commencement of his reign was marked by his assassination of the two principal men who had assisted him in coming to the throne. His whole reign was further remarkable for the way in which he persecuted the Christians." The revolting circumstances attending the murder of the Missionary John DeBritto-a murder consummated under the express orders of the Setupati-are fully narrated by Mr. Nelson (id., p. 217-224). "He appointed his brother-in-law Raghunatha (belonging to the Kalla family), whose sister Kattari he had married, Tondaman of Pudukottai.

"It was in this reign that the capital of the territory was removed from Pogalur to Ramnad, the present seat of Government. This prince was also famous for his bravery in war. He rescued the Nayakka of Madura from the tyranny of Rustam-Khan, and successfully prosecuted a war against the King of Tanjore, who was obliged to cede all the territories south of the Amburi river."

Intrigues seem to have been the order of the day during this reign, and the history is a succession of plots and rebellions, resulting in constant disturbance and warfare. There was a desultory war with Tanjore in A.D. 1700, and in 1702 on one occasion an army from Madura, aided by a force from Tanjore, was defeated by the Setupati and driven back. Another signal victory was obtained over Tanjore in 1709, a year which was also signalized by a most appalling famine, aggravated by a desolating flood. "Raghunatha Tevar Kilavan Setupati breathed his last in 1708 and his numerous wives burned themselves alive with the dead body of their husband. He was succeeded by his adopted son' Tiruvuqaiya Tēvar alias Vijaya Raghunātha Tēvar, son of Kadamba Tēvar."

7. VIJAYA RAGHUNĀTHA TĒVAR alias TIRUVUDAIYA TĒVAR (1709—1723).—" The King of Tanjore was not inactive during this reign He gained over the Raja of Pudukōttai to his side, and declared war against the Setupati, who went out to meet the allied forces at Arundangi. Some indecisive actions were fought. An epidemic broke out in the camp of the Setupati which carried off many of his sons and wives, and he himself contracted the disease, which proved fatal shortly after he was brought to Ramnad. He nominated one Tandar Tevar, a great grandson of the father of the late Kilavan Setupati, to be his successor."

8. Tanda Tevar (1723-1724).—"The accession of this Setupati to the throne was contested by Bhavani Sankara Tevar, an illegitimate son of Kilavan Setupati. He got the assistance of the King of Tanjore by promising to cede him some territory, and invaded Ramnad with the Tanjore forces within four months of the accession of the Setupati. The allied forces of the Setupati, Tondaman and the King took the Setupati prisoner. He was shortly after put to death and Bhavanī Šankara Tevar proclaimed himself Setupati."

9. Bhayani Sankara Setupati (1724-1728).—"He was very injudicious in his treatment of the Poligars under him. One Sasivarna Periya Udaiya Tevar was deprived of his Palaiyam. He therefore fled to the court of Tanjore. Sasivarna gained the favour of the King of Tanjore by the extraordinary bravery he showed in fighting with a large tiger. Katta Tevar,2 the maternal uncle of the late Setupati and the legal heir, who had escaped from Ramnad at the time of its capture by Bhavanī

The relationship is somewhat doubtful (Madura Country, p. 247).
 Mr. Nelson calls him "Kattayadava" (Madura Country, p. 249.)

Śańkara, was also at this time at Tanjore. Kūtta and Śaśivarna became close friends, and by their joint inducement got the King of Tanjore to entrust them with a large force, with which they defeated the Setupati at a battle fought at Uraiyur in which the Setupati was taken prisoner. After this success

Kūtta Tēvar was proclaimed Setupati."

10. KUTTA TEVAR, alias Kumāra Muttu Vijaya Raghunātha Setupati (1728—1734).—"Kutta Tevar was not destined to rule over the extensive territories of Ramnad. For it was arranged, before the success which gained him the throne, that the territory should be parcelled out between the confederates. Accordingly the King of Tanjore took all the lands north of the Pambar. The remainder was divided into five parts, of which two went to the share of Raja Muttu Vijaya Raghunatha Periya Udaiya Tevar, who made Sivagangai his capital. (He married Akhilandisvari Nachchiyar, the illegitimate daughter of the Setupati. His territory is also called Sinnavādagai). Over the remaining three parts called Periyavādagai, which form the present Ramuad territory, the Setupati Kutta Tevar ruled. He was succeeded by his son Muttu Kumara Vijaya Raghunatha Tevar."

11. MUTTU KUMĀRA VIJAYA RAGHUNĀTHA SETUPATI (1734—1747).—" During the reign of this prince the Dalavay was all-powerful. The prince dying in the prime of his life without any issue, the Dulavay nominated Rakka Tevar, a cousin of the deceased Kutta Tevar, to the rule."

12. Rākka Tēvar Setupati (1747-1748).—"This reign was remarkable for the repulsion of an invasion by the Raja of Tanjore by the Dalavay Vellaiyan Servaikaran, who also commanded several military expeditions and subjugated several insubordinate Polegars in the Tinnevelly District. The Setupati grew afraid of the Dalavay's power and recalled him from Tinnevelly. This step proved fatal to him. On his return the Dalavay openly rebelled, and the Setupati was therefore obliged to flee for his safety to Pamban. Thither he was pursued and taken prisoner and was deposed. One Sella Tevar, alias Vijaya Raghunatha Tevar, a member of the Kilavan family, was placed on the throne by the Dalavav.

13. Sella Tevar, alias Vijaya Raghunātha Setupati (1748—1760).—"This prince ruled for twelve years, during which another invasion by the Tanjore Raja was firmly met with and defeated by the Dalavay. Sella Tevar died in 1760 and was succeeded by his sister's son Muttu Ramalinga Tevar, a child two months' old,"

Dr. Burgess informs me, on the authority of the best informed men at Ramesvaram, that Sella Teyar's sister Muttu Tiruvay Nachchiyar, married Nerinji Tevar of Yelambadu, and had a son born in S.S. 1647 (A.D. 1725-6). He adds that she is stated to have ruled from S.S. 1643 (A.D. 1721-2).

14. Muttu Rāmalinga Setupati (1760—1772, 1780—1794).—"Vellaiyan Servaikaran, the powerful Dalavay, died at the commencement of this reign. He was succeeded by Damodaram Pillai in his Dalavayship. Muttu Tiruvay Nachchiyar, the mother of the infant prince, acted as regent."

Mr. Nelson adds, "In 1770 the Raja of Tanjore was again defeated, this time most decisively, by an army under the command of Thomotharam (Damodaram) Pillai: and this was the last occasion on which the troops of Ramnad were permitted to distinguish themselves."

"In the year 1773 the army of the Setupati was defeated by an English force under general Joseph Smith, who subdued the territory on behalf of the Navab of Trichinopoly. The infant Setupati, his mother Muttu Tiruvay Nachchiyar and his sister Mangalisvari Nachchiyar were removed from Rammad and kept at Trichinopoly under surveillance."

"The territory was for a period of eight years, i.e., from 1773-1780, under the direct management of the Navab.

"The petty chiefs who had respected the power of the Setupati raised an army and threatened to capture Ramnad and drive away the Navab's managers. This circumstance alarmed the Navab, who deemed it prudent to set the Setupati at liberty and to despatch him to Ramnad at the head of an army: this arrangement had the desired effect. The country became tranquil and the chiefs were defeated.

"The Setupati resumed again the reins of government. He continued to rule for fourteen years until 1794. His acts at the end of this period became very suspicious, verging on rebellion, so that at the instance of Mangalisvari Nachchiyar, the sister, the Setupati was deposed and carried away as prisoner to Trichinopoly under the orders of the Navab.

"The English at this time became the virtual rulers of the Carnatic, and they sent the Setupati to Madras as a State prisoner. The Ramnad territory was taken under the British rule and continued for seven years up to 1802. In 1803 the English Government placed Rani Mangalisvari Nachahiyar, the sister of the Setupati, on the throne."

&#x27;Mr. Nelson gives different dates for the death of Kutta Tovar and the reigns of his successors. According to him Kutta Tovar died in 1752, his son died after a reign of a few days or weeks, and Rakka Tovar succeeded.

15. Mańgalīśvakī Nāchehiyāk (1863—1812).—" In the year 1803 the permanent settlement was made, by which the Rāṇī Setupati bound herself and her successors to pay to the English Government the annual pēshkash of Rs. 3,24,387-1-2. She ruled the estate for ten years. She was called the Istimrari Zamindārṇī in remembrance of the settlement. This reign is particularly remarkable for the charitable endowments she made out of the permanently settled villages of the estate. Her adopted son, Aṇṇāswāmi Setupati, alias Muttu Vijaya Raghunātha Setupati, succeeded her."

16. Annasyami Setupati, alias Muttu Vijaya Raghunatha Setupati (1812—1815).—"This prince was a minor when his adoptive mother died. Pradhani Tyaga Raja Pillai carried on the administration of the country. This prince's title, in other words the adoption, was not undisputed. Sivakami Nachchiyar, the daughter of Muttu Ramalinga Setupati, sued in the Company's courts to have her claim to become Rani Setupati in preference to Annasyami recognised. She succeeded in her suit and was legally appointed the ruler of the estate in the room of Annasyami in the year 1815."

17. ŚIVAKĀMĪ NĀCHCHIYĀR (1815—1829).—"This princess enjoyed the kingdom for one full year while she allowed the pēshkash to fall in arrears. The estate, therefore, was placed under the management of the Court of the Sadar Adālat for fourteen years on her behalf. In the interval the law suit between the Rāṇī Zemindar and Aṇṇāsvāmi Setupati was prosecuted with the utmost vigour in the Appellate Court, which finally directed the restoration of the estate to Aṇṇāsvāmi Setupati. This prince having died in the meanwhile, his widow Muttu Vīrāyi Nāchchiyār, who successfully conducted the suit to the end, had adopted one Rāmasvāmi Tēvar as her son, in whose favour she resigned her right to become Setupati."

18. Rāmasvāmi Tēvar, alias Vijava Raghunātha Rāmasvāmi Setupati (1829).—" This prince died in the same year in which he commenced to reign and was succeeded by his infant daughter Manga-lisvarī Nāchchiyaz."

19. Mangalisvanī Nāchchiyār (1829—1838).—" Muttu Vîrāyi Nāchchiyār, the Rāṇī's grandmother, and Muttu Sella Tēvar managed the affairs of the State on behalf of the Rāṇī Setupati, who met with an early death. She was succeeded by her infant sister Dorai Raja Nachchiyar."

20. Dorai Rāja Nāchchiyār (1838—1845).—" Muttu Sella continued to act as manager, but his management was not approved by the East India Company, to whom several charges against the manager were preferred. The estate was placed under the Court of Wards, and although the manager was declared innocent after a thorough inquiry, he was not entrasted with the control of the estate, which continued under the management of the Court of Wards. Dorai Rāja Nāchchiyār died in 1845. Even after the death of the Rāṇi the Court of Wards continued to govern the estate until Parvatavardhini Nāchchiyār, the wife of Rāmasvāmi Setupati, was declared to be the lawful proprietress to the estate."

21. Parvatavardenini Năchchivăr (1845—1868.)—"She assumed the management of the estate in 1846. She died in 1868, leaving her adopted son, Muttu Rămalinga Setupati, to succeed her. During her management there were several protracted litigations which necessarily involved the estate in heavy debt. Even the pëshkash fell into arrears and accumulated. Ponnusvămi Têvar, the son of the adopted

Setupati, managed the estate."

22. MUTTU RĀMALINGA SETUPATI (1868—1873).—"When this prince assumed the management of the estate, he found the debts of the estate had alarmingly increased. But he could devise no means to get himself out of it. The estate was in danger. The English Government, therefore, was compelled to interfere. The estate was placed under the attachment of a Special Assistant Collector. In the year 1873 the Setupati died suddenly, leaving two minor sons, Bhāskara Setupati and Dinakarasvāmi Tevar. The former in now recognised as the proprietor of the estate."

23. Buaskara Setupati (1873).—This prince being a minor, the estate is under the management of the Court of Wards.

RASHTRAKUTAS, THE ...

The latest and best account of this dynasty yet published is by Mr. Fleet at pages 31—38 of his Dynastics of the Kanarese District. From it I extract most of what follows. Dr. Bühler (see especially Ind. Ant. VI, p. 59, &c.) has carefully studied the records of this family; and Dr. Burgess gives an account of them in his Third Archæological Report for Bombay, published in 1878. A paper by Professor Shankar Pandurang Pandit published in Ind. Ant. I, 205, may be studied with advantage.

The Rashtrakutas, coming from the north, subverted the older dynasty of the Chalukyas in the Kanarese districts of the Bombay Presidency in the early part or middle of the eighth century A.D.

The kings of this dynasty did not come much into contact with those of the south, but, as they are occasionally met with, the genealogy of the family is here given :-

Called "Vairamegha" in an inscription published by Mr. Lewis Rice in Ind. Act. XII, 11.
Called "Akalayarsha" and "Kannesvara" in the same.
Called "Prabhutavarsha" in the same.
He was reigning in Saks 735 (A.D. 813-4) according to the same inscription.
Mr. Fleet is doubtful whether these three persons over came to the throne, because the interval between Govinda V and Krishna IV is so small. But a succession of three kings in a very short space of time is not an unusual occurrence in Indian history.

20. Kakka III, (Karka III), Kakkala, Karkara, Amoghavarsha III, or Vallabhanarendra III, A.D. 972-3. (Daughter) 21. Jakabbe or Jākalādevī, (married to the Western Chālukya king, Taila II).

Dantivarma II is said to have conquered, amongst other kings and countries, the kings of Kanchi and Kalinga, and the Śriśaila country (Ind. Ant. XI, 111).

King Dhruva is said to have humbled the pride of the Pallavas.

His successor, Govinda III, in an inscription of A.D. 803-4, boasts of having conquered Dantiga, the ruler of Kanchi (Conjecveram). The boast is repeated in other inscriptions, "which tell us also that the ruler of Vengī, i.e., his contemporary of the Eastern Chālukya family, was one of his vassals, and was employed to build for him the high walls of a town or fortress." The Chālukyan sovereign would seem to be Vijayāditya, alias "Narendra Mrigarāja." The inscription of A.D. 803-4 contains the earliest known instance of the use of the cycle of 60 years, which grew into common use from the fourteenth century downwards. The inscription is dated in the year Subhānu.

The twentieth sovereign Kakka III claims to have subdued the Chola and Pandiyan kings, but this is probably mere empty boasting, as in A.D. 973-4 he himself was defeated and probably slain by Taila II of the Western Chālukyas. The Rāshtrakūta dynasty ceased with him.

RATTAS, THE ...

The Ratta Mahomandalesvaras, or great feudatory lords, are often alluded to in inscriptions of the Kanarese districts of the Bombay Presidency, but do not appear to have come much in contact with the southern chiefs. Their capital was first Saundatti, then called Sugandharvarti in the Belgaum District, and afterwards Venugrama or Velugrama, the modern Belgaum itself. They were at first feudatories of the Rashtrakutas, but afterwards raised themselves into the condition of independent chiefs. They were of the Jain religion. Grants of the family are found dated between the years A.D. 875-6 and A.D. 1228-9. They seem to have succumbed to the rising power of the Yadavas of Devagiri, as recorded in the Behatti grant of Krishna of that dynasty, dated S.S. 1175 (A.D. 1253-4). (For genealogy and account of the family, see Mr. J. F. Fleet's Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, pp. 79—83, and Dr. Burgess' Second Bombay Archæological Report, 1876, Kathiawad and Kachh, p. 232.)

THE SANTARA KINGS IN MAISUR.

This was a family of chiefs, apparently feudatories of the Chalukyas, who lived at Hombucha or Humcha (Patti Pombuchchapura) in the Nagar Country of Maisūr. They were Jains. Mr. Lewis Rice gives the following list in his "Mysore Inscriptions" (Introduction, p. lxix):—

Santara, Santarésvara, several kings of this name.

Kamana.

Singideva.

Taila.

Kāma (married Bijjalādevī. Her sister Chattalādevī was married to Vijayādityadeva of the Kadamba family of Goa).

Jagadeva, Jagaddeva, Tribhuvana Malla (son), A.D. 1149.

Singideva, his brother.

Bammarasa, his son.

An inscription of A.D. 1162-3 at Anumakonda, close to Orangal, of the Ganapati sovereign Kākatīya Rudradeva, records that in the time of the Ganapati sovereign Prole, Jagaddeva besieged that place, but was repulsed and put to flight. Mr. Fleet (Ind. Ant. XI, 10) thinks that this is evidently the Santara king Jagaddeva, and that it was as a feudatory of Taila of the Western Chalukyas that he laid siege to Anumakonda.

SENDRAKAS, THE ...

"One of the Kadamba inscriptions mentions incidentally" the dynasty of the Sendrakas, "the representative of which in the time of the Kadamba King Harivarma, was Bhanusakti. But all else that we at present know for certain about this dynasty is that, in the time of the Western Chalukya king Vikramāditya I, the representative of it was Devasakti, who seems to have been a feudatory of the Chalukya monarch,2 and that in the time of Vinayaditya, the son of Vikramaditya I, the representative of it was Pogilli, who again appears to have been a feudatory of the Chalukyas."3 (Mr. Fleet's Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, p. 10.)

The dates of these Sendraka kings would be about the close of the fifth century and the close of the sixth century.

SETUPATIS OF RAMNAD, THE ...

(See Ramnad.)

THE SILĀHĀRAS OF KOLHĀPUR.

From Mr. Fleet's sketch of the history of this family (Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, pp. 98-106) I do not gather that, so far as is yet known, they ever came in contact with the powers in the south: but as it is quite possible that they may have done so, and that some reference to them may yet be discovered in some inscriptions of the Southern Dakhan, I give the genealogy as given by Mr. Fleet. His work should be consulted for a fuller notice of the family and an able discussion as to the site of the ancient city of Tagara mentioned in Ptolemy and the Periplus. (See also Ind. Ant. V, 276.)

> Jatiga I. Nāyivarmā or Navimma. Chandraraja. Jatiga II.

His date is not yet conclusively settled (see above, p. 179).

SINDAS OF ERAMBARAGE, THE ...

The information which follows is also taken from Mr. Fleet's Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, (pp. 95-97).

Inscriptions of the Sinda dynasty are found in the Kaladgi and Dharwad Districts. Their capital was Erambarage or Erambarige, probably 'Yelburga' in the Nizam's Dominions. Their territory embraced a small portion of the country in that neighbourhood.

The following is the genealogy of the dynasty:-

Achugi II made war on the Hoysala Ballalas under orders of his suzerain, Vikramaditya VI of the Western Chalukyas. He was victorious and took Goa ("Gove"). He "caused the Pandyas to retreat, dispersed the Malapas, or people of the Western Ghauts, and seized upon the Konkana." He burnt Goa and "Uppinakatti" (? Uppinangadi in South Canara).

Permadi I is recorded to have "pursued Jayakesi, who must be the second of that name of the family of the Kadambas of Goa, and seized upon the royal power of the Hoysalas." He seems to have defeated King Bittiga or Vishnuvardhana of the latter dynasty, and besieged his capital city, Dvarasamudra.

ŚIVAGANGAI ZEMINDARS.

The Sivagangai Zemindari was originally part and parcel of the territories of the Setupatis of Ramnad, for a sketch of whose dynasty see above (p. 227). It will there be found that in the reign of Kutta Tevar, alias Kumara Muttu Vijaya Raghunatha Setupati (1728—1734), the territories of Ramnad were divided into five parts, two of which went to Sasivarna, alias Muttu Vijaya Raghunatha Periya Udaiyar Tevar. This became the Sivagangai Zemindari. It is called the Sima Vādagai by the natives, and the "Lesser Maravar" by some European writers.

The zemindari being quite of modern origin, it is useless to give a sketch of its ruling family here.

Readers are referred for information to pages 423-427 of "Pharoah's Gazetteer."

TANJORE, THE MAHRATTA DYNASTY OF ... (See Mahrattas.)

TRAVANCORE (TIRUVARANKODU), RAJAS OF ...

(The following list is taken mostly from Mr. P. Shungoonny Menon's "History of Travancore.")
The family are said to be descendants of the old Chera Rajas, who owned the south and west of the peninsula. Other accounts make them descendants of Cheraman Perumal.

Mr. Shungoonny Menon's history traces the family from a Chera king, Bhanu Vikrama, whom the mythological Parašu Rāma placed on the throne of South Kerala after it had been recovered from the sea.\(^1\) Parašu Rāma is said to have crowned Bhanu Vikrama's nephew, Āditya Vikrama, in succession to his uncle, and to have made Udaiyavarmā king of North Kerala. This was in the Tretāyuga. In the Kaliyuga a list of forty-eight kings is given who reigned over South Kerala during the first ten centuries, i.e., up to 2102 B.C. Mention is made of a sovereign, by name Kulašekhara Ārvār, in Kaliyuga 1860 (1242 B.C.), who became an ascetic, and has since been worshipped as a saint; and coming to comparatively modern times, Vīravarmā Pāṇdiyan of Madura is said to have conquered and ruled over the Chera country at the time; of the reign of Sālivāhana (A.D. 78). The Chera country was afterwards overrun by the Kongu chiefs and the Chera royal family retired to their original home in Travancore (South Kerala), giving up their extensive acquisitions in Madura and Tinnevelly.

The Perumals ruled over most of the Kerala country for about 200 years, during which period the Syrian Christians and Jews settled in Cochin. The last Perumal is said to have disappeared from his residence after having handed over his insignia of office to two dependents, whom he constituted respectively Raja of Cochin and Zamorin of Calicut. (See above, p. 197.)

All the above is purely traditionary. Now commences a list, seemingly more reliable, but requiring proof.

Little more is known for five centuries, and the author's remarks, as he attempts to bridge the interval, show a lamentable want of historical knowledge. A king named Adityavarma is mentioned as living in A.D. 1189, and another of the same name in A.D. 1330.

Probably the Bana Paramal of the Keralelpati (see above, p. 196).
 All Chern grants of any age commence with the phrase "Sri Fira Kerala Chakravarti" or "Chira Maracan Tribhucana Chakravarti," while the Kongu grants commence "Sri Fira Raya Chakravarti." (History of Travancore, 31.)

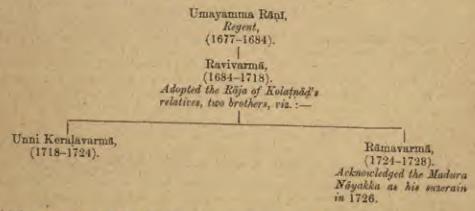

Then come the following, belonging to a branch of the family :-

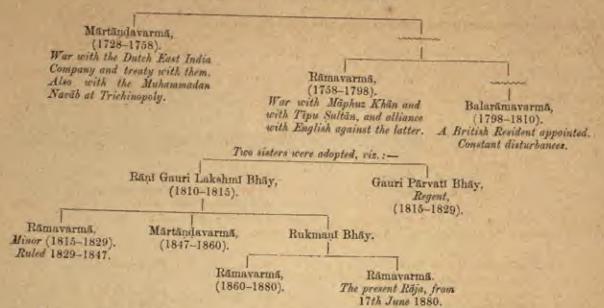

Now follows a list of kings, without any relationship given :-

The last Aditysvarma and his male relatives were murdered, and his niece Umayamma Rani became regent in 1677 A.D. In 1680 occurred a Muhammadan inroad and their leader established himself at Trevandrum, but was driven out and killed by the regent's general, Keralavarma, a member of the royal house. The regent's son, attaining his majority, was crowned A.D. 1684.

This chief was succeeded by Martandavarma, the son of a Rani of Kolatnad, adopted into the Travancore family by Ravivarma.

The succession in this family takes place entirely in the female line.

VENGI, KINGS OF THE-COUNTRY.

The Vengi kingdom, that is the country lying between the Krishna and Godavari rivers and extending from the sea to a distance inland at present not known but apparently not very great, was ruled by the Pallavas (see p. 212) till the dynasty was subverted by Kubja Vishnuvardhana of the Chalukya family about the year A.D. 605. It is not yet quite certain whether the Vengi kingdom was independent or merely a province of the kingdom of Kanchi, but the evidence would seem to show that the latter was the case. We find the Pallava sovereign of Kanchi, Simhavarma II, about the fifth or sixth century, granting in his eighth year the village of Mangadur in Vengorashtra (the Vengi province) to a Brahman.2

The capital of the Vengi country seems to have been Vegi or Pedda Vegi, a few miles north of Ellore in the Godavari District.3 Dr. Burnell speaks of Vengi as an independent kingdom, governed by a dynasty of Salankayanas, and attributes a grant published by Mr. Fleet and containing the names of the sovereign, Vijaya Chandavarma, and his son Vijaya Nandivarma, to the fifth century A.D. He thinks that the origin of the kingdom "does not probably go back beyond the second century A.D." Mr. Fleet mentions a second inscription examined by him, which contains the names apparently of the same Vijaya Nandivarma and his son "Vijaya Tungavarma" or "Vijaya Buddhavarma." Shortly after the Chalukyas had subverted the Vengi dynasty the country was visited by Hiwen-Thsang, who calls the kingdom "An-ta-lo" (Andhra), and the capital city "Ping-ki-lo," which Dr. Burnell ingeniously translated into "Vengi" with the Telugu suffix 15 added to it by mistake on the part of the traveller.

A grant of Govinda III of the Räshtrakūta dynasty 1 speaks of the Eastern Chalukya sovereign in A.D. 807 as "Lord of Vengi" and states that he came and worked for the Rashtrakuta king as a

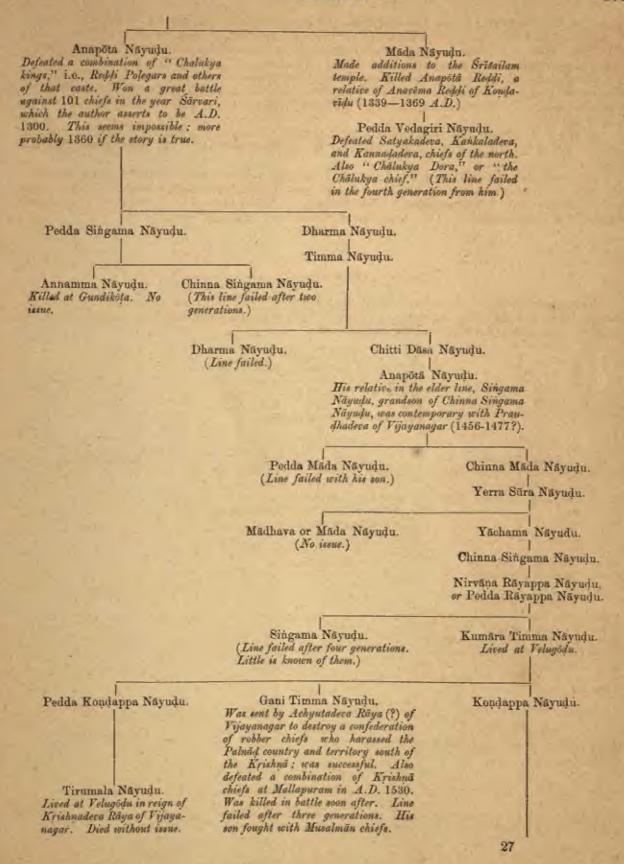

An inscription of a later date on a pillar at Amaravati, unfortunately mutilated, gives a number of names of kings which may be those of a Vengī dynasty, but the (context is doubtful. The names are "Simhavarmā," "Simhavarmā," "Nandivarmā," "Simhavarmā II," "Arkavarmā," "Ugravarmā," "Mahendravarmā." The names also of "Sūra" and "Pallava" occur.

VENKATAGIRI.

The present estate of Venkatagiri lies in the district of Nellore. I am unable as yet to give any reliable dates, but the following table is compiled from a pamphlet published in Madras in 1875 by T. Rama Rau Avargal, a Vakeel of the High Court.

VIJAYANAGAR DYNASTY, THE ...

It is a matter for great regret that the genealogy of the dynasties that successively ruled the countries forming the Vijayanagar kingdom have been found so difficult to work out and so confusing. But it is a fact that great confusion exists in the various contemporary records as to the relationships of the sovereigns, and a large number of inscriptions will have to be very carefully collated before absolute certainty can be arrived at. More harm than good is done by attempts to harmonize the lists given by native poets or interested informants, most of whom had some object in view when they wrote.

The information given below is almost entirely obtained from inscriptions, and as a basis to work on Dr. Burnell's table, given in his South Indian Palarography (pages 54, 55) has been taken. This was compiled mostly from the Villappakkam Plates, which are published in Indian Antiquary II, 371.

On pages 125—128 above will be found sixty-seven inscriptions noted, belonging to the older dynasty that preceded the powerful dynasty founded by Narasimha. Of a number of these I have only had rough notes sent to me, but some have been fully examined by other writers, as well as by myself, with the aid of my fellow-worker, Pandit Natesa Sastri.

I put forward the following table of the genealogy of the first dynasty, tentatively, premising that it may be found necessary to alter it by the light of other inscriptions hereafter.

4. Deva Raya I, or Virāpāksha. Vira Praudhadeva, married Padmāmbā and Mallayavce or Mallamba, (A.D. 1406, 1409, 1410, 1412). 5. Vijaya Bhūpati, Vira Mallanna Udaiyar. married Narayanidevi, (A.D. 1418).

6. Deva Raya II, or Viradeva. (A.D. 1422, 1424, 1426, 1427, 1429, 1430, 1431, 1436, 1437, 1438, 1445, 1447).

The earliest Vijayanagar grant I have yet seen is noted as No. 79 of the List of Copper-plate Grants given above. I am inclined to look on it with some suspicion, since, while professing to date from the year A.D. 1336-the date, that is, of the first real sovereign of the dynasty-it gives a genealogy traced roughly downwards through a few mythological names from Chandra. Such mythological pedigrees are, as a rule, to be found only in the later grants of a dynasty, after it has become firmly established, and when the sovereigns have acquired sufficient power to attract to their courts a number of sycophantic poets and poetasters.

Other inscriptions seem to be more reliable. One, of Harihara I, dated S.S. 1261 (A.D. 1339), is peculiarly interesting, as it styles him merely Mahamandalekrara; and this is followed by inscriptions of Bukka, his younger brother, who bears the same inferior title. (Mr. Fleet's Pāli, Sanskrit and Old Canarese Inscriptions, Nos. 149, 150.) Harihara II was, in S.S. 1310 (A.D. 1388), entitled Mahāraijādhirājā. An inscription of Bukka, dated A.D. 1354-5 (published by Mr. Rice) 2 gives us only the names of Sangama and Kampa, and so does a grant published by Mr. Fleet, which is dated in the same year (S.S. 1276 expired, Vijaya). Bukka's inscription of A.D. 1355-6 (S.S. 1277 current, Manualla), noted by Mr. Fleet, shows that he had then made it Historians in the Hericana current. Manmatha), noted by Mr. Fleet, shows that he had then made "Hosapattana in the Hoyisana country" his capital. No. 58 of my List of Copper-plate Grants (supra, p. 8) is a grant by Sangama son of Kampa in A.D. 1356-7 (S.S. 1278 current, Durmukhi), and gives the genealogy of the earlier kings. We have yet to learn why Kampa or his son Saugama did not succeed to Harihara and how they were ousted by Bukka. From the grants of 1355-6 and 1356-7 (S.S. 1277 current, Manmatha, and S.S. 1278 current, Durmukhi) published by Mr. Rice, we find that the name of the commander-in-chief of Bukka's armies was Nadegonta Mallinatha, son of N. Sayyana. His boast that he commanded the "Turaka army, the Secana army, the Telunga army, the powerful Pandiya army, and the Hoysana army" must be accepted with reservation. In 1364 A.D. occurred the first conflict between the Muhammadans and the troops of Vijayanagar. An inscription of A.D. 1368 (S.S. 1290 current, Kilaka) states that Bukka lived at Hastinavatipura, and mentions his prime minister Madhavanka, i.e., the celebrated priest of Siva, Madhavacharya-Vidyaranya, abbot of the monastery at Sringeri. An inscription at Porumamilla in the Cuddapah District " mentions Bukka's son Bhaskara Bhupati as reigning or governing in Udayagiri in A.D. 1369, but this inscription requires examination, because it would seem probable that the Reddis held Udayagiri at that period.

The genealogy given in the inscription published by Mr. Fleet in the J.B.B.R.A.S. (XII 338, 372) confirms that given above as far as Harihara II, in whose reign (A.D. 1379, S.S. 1301 current, Siddhārti) it was executed. The glorification attached to the name of Sangama coincides with that ascribed in a subsequent grant of Narasa to the then sovereign, and it was probably a formula.1 It states that he worshipped at Ramesvaram, built a bridge over the Kaveri, crossed it, defeated his enemy, and captured Śrīrangam; also that he defeated the armies of Chera, Chola, Pandiya, the Turushka, the Gajapati, and others. The same grant shows that Harihara I and Bukka did not reign jointly, or, at any rate, that Bukka succeeded Harihara; and that the capital was then at Vijayanagara. Harihara II gave many gifts to the great southern temples. He also endowed some Jain temples, as is apparent from the inscription on the dheajastambha of a Jaina shrine at Vijayanagar (Vol. I, 106; Asiatic Researches XX, p. 20), which records a grant by that monarch, mentioning his minister, Chaicha Dandanayaka, whose son's name was Iruga. The minister of Harihara II was, as we learn from inscriptions at Harihara and Belur in Maisur,2 named Mudda Dandadhipa, or Dandesa, in the years A.D. 1379 and 1382. Another powerful minister, by name Gunda Dandadhipa, is mentioned as living in the reign of Harihara, but the date is not certain. In 1380 A.D. Harihara expelled the Muhammadans from Goa, Madhavacharya being his minister (J.B.B.R.A.S. IX, 227). A grant of Virapaksha, son of Harihara son of Bukka, quoted by Mr. Garstin in his South Arcot Manual (p. 2), dated in A.D. 1383-4, gives us the name of "Malladevi, daughter of Ramadeva," as that of his mother, and "Kamakshi" as that of his grandmother. An inscription of A.D. 1399 (s.S. 1321 current, Pramādhi, noticed by Mr. Fleet) 1 states that a minister named Bachanna Udaiyar (or Vodeya) was then in charge of the government of Gon.

Dr. Burnell gives the date 1401 as the last of the reign of Harihara, and names as his successor his son Bukka II (1401-1418), who married Tippamba. He also gives us the elder son of Bukka II, "Devaraja, Vîradeva, or Vîrabhûpati," as reigning 1418—1434, and notes the name of his brother Krishnaraja. He states that Devaraja married Padmamba and Mallamba, and was succeeded by the following sovereigns :-

In opposition to this table, I may point to the thirty-five dated inscriptions noted in my list as between the years 1406 and 1487 (or 1497?), all of which combine to show that Harihara II was succeeded(?) by Deva Raya I in or before the year 1406, that the latter had a son Vijaya Bhūpati, who was living in A.D. 1418, and that his son Deva Raya II reigned from A.D. 1422 (about) till at least the year 1447 A.D. My inscriptions then give the names of Mallikarjuna (1459), Virapaksha (1470 and 1473), and Praudhadeva (1476). I am not certain as to the accuracy of the single inscription at Avur in South Arcot,6 which gives us a Narasimha as reigning in A.D. 1470-1, and prefer that it should be further examined.

The inscription at Hasan in Maisur? gives the coronation of Deva Raya as having taken place in A.D. 1406 (S.S. 1328 current, year Vyaya), and I have seven other inscriptions of that reign dated 1409, 1410, and 1412 A.D." Inscriptions Nos. 87, 89, and 138 of my List of Copper-plate Grants give the genealogy of Deva Raya II, son of Vijaya Bhūpati, son of Deva Raya I, son of Harihara II. This is confirmed by the inscription published in the Asiatic Researches (XX, p. 22), dated in S.S. 1348 (A.D. 1426-7), in which the same genealogy is given, and in which Deva Raya II, or Vîradeva Raya, is expressly termed "Abhinaca," or the "young" Deva Raya. 'Abdu-r Razzāk also speaks of him as "exceedingly young" in A.D. 1444, so that he must have been a mere child at his accession. (Matla'us

One dated 1412 A.D. mentions that Savanna, son of the Dandanayaka, Naganna, was then Viceroy of Goa, under Vijavanagar; while another at Vijavanagar (Asiatic Researches XX, 31) states that one Krishna was minister to king Deva Raya. Krishna came from a family of ministers. Dharmadarasu and Savena, brothers, were ministers. They had a sister named Singamba, who married Ramarasu, and had five sons, the eldest of whom was the minister Krishna.

Sa'dain, in Sir H. Elliot's History of India IV, 121.)1 A stone inscription, however, at Tiruvannamalai 2 seems to mention Vijaya Bhūpati as reigning in 1418. After that date till 1447 my nineteen inscriptions give me no name but that of Deva Raya II. His minister was Naganua Dhannavaka.

We now come to the second or Narasimha dynasty, whose seions became more powerful than any monarchs who had ever reigned over the south of India. Dr. Burnell fixes A.D. 1490 as the initial date of Narasimha's reign, and at present no inscription that I can be sure of appears to overthrow that statement. I observe, however, that Bishop Caldwell, in his History of Timerelly (p. 48), fixes the date of the beginning of "Narasimha, or Vira Narasimha's" reign as A.D. 1487, and I have been told of an inscription at Conjeeveram (which should be examined) dated in that same year, in which Narasimha is mentioned. Narasimha's family name was Silura.4 We have yet to learn the history of his acquiring the sovereignty of Vijayanagar and ousting the older dynasty.

From the grant (No. III) published by Mr. Fleet in Vol. XII of the J.B.B.R.A.S. (pp. 342 st seq.) and from others similar we learn that Krishnadeva was son of Narasa, Nrisimha or Narasimha, who had a wife Tippāji. Krishna's mother was Nāgalādevī or Nāgāmbikā, and some inscriptions expressly state that she was not the wife of the sovereign, but merely a favourite dancing girl. Narasa was son of Isvara, whose queen was Bukkamma; Isvara was son of Timma who married Devaki.

Before going into the question of the inscriptions of the second dynasty, I have determined to give a sketch of the period from Ferishta's History; for though this seems at variance with the evidence of the inscriptions, it is reasonable to suppose that it is trustworthy. From Ferishta we learn that in A.D. 1489, "Heenraaje" (Scott's Edit., I, 210), Minister of Vijavanagar, had in that year usurped the sovereignty, "leaving the Roies (Rāyas) only nominal power"; that in 1492 (id., p. 212-13), after a battle on the Krishna against the 'Adil Shāhi Muhammadans, the "young roy" (name not given) died of his wounds, the usurping minister fleeing to Vijayanagar; and that "Heemraaje" then seized on the government of the country. Further on (p. 228) we read that "Heemraaje was the first usurper. He had poisoned the "young Raja of Beejanuggur (Vijayanagar), son of Sheoroy (Sica Riya?), and made his infant brother a "tool to his designs; by degrees overthrowing the ancient nobility, and at length establishing his own "authority over the kingdom." This is narrated as showing the state of Vijayanagar previous to the commencement of the reign of 'Isma'il 'Adil Shāh of Vijayapura (Rijapur), i.e., about the year A.D. 1511. When 'Isma'il began to assume for himself the reins of government, "Heemraaje" was at Raichur, which fortress had been surrendered to Vijayanagar (id., p. 236). In 1520 'Isma'il made an unsuccessful attempt to recover territory from Vijayanagar. In 1530 another expedition against Vijayanagar was undertaken, "the affairs of Beejanuggur being in confusion owing to the death of "Heemraaje, who was newly succeeded by his son Ramraaje, against whom rebellions had arisen by

<sup>1 &#</sup>x27;Abdu-r Razzak landed at Calicut on an orubassy from Samarkand in June (2) 1442, and gives a graphic description of Calicut and Vijayanagar, with his journeys to and from the latter place. He experienced kind treatment at the hands of the Zamorin, and notices that all vessels were equally received in the port of Calicut, whereas in other ports strange ellips were often plandered. Men and women both went about with their bodies bare from the waist apwards. Polyandry prevailed. Calicut was not then under the power of Vijayanagar, but the Zamorin was much afraid of the power of his great neighbour. The ambassador journeyed to Vijayanagar by way of Mangalore, Madabidri, and Bednur (Bidror). He describes the temples at Madabidri as being all of brass, and the statue made of gold, while he launches out in admiration of the sculptures of the temples at Bidror. He describes Vijayanagar and magnificent city, with sevem forthicd walls, and, outside these, cheened of each of which was a lofty mandapam. The valence and the statue made of the palace stood in the centre with four because round it, at the head of each of which was a lofty mandapam. The valence alled the Diwas Khéna, very large, and with a mandapam in front. Behind the king's palace was that of the Diwask. To the left of the palace was the mint. where "earthms, partition, and fanisms" were coined. All the people in the streets wore golden jewels. Behind the mint was a bazaar 300 yards long and 20 broad, furnished with stone seats. The name of the king was "Deva Raya." He was exceedingly young, with an olive complexion, of spare body, but tall. Before the ambassador's arrival, and while he was still at Calicut, a desporate attempt had been made on the sovereign's lieb by his (the king's) burther. All the nobles were treacherously assassinated, and the king was atabled by his brother. But the attempt was frustrated and the traitors slain. Plusais went on an expedition against Kulbarga, the king of which country, 'Ala-ad-dim Alpmad Shah Bahman, having heard of "several roles." This time Mudkal and Raichar were retaken by 'Isma'il (id., 252). Later on we read that at the accession of Ibrahim 'Adil Shah I in 1535, "Ramraaje of Beejanuggur" took 3,000 foreign troops into his pay. Ferishta then gives a sketch of later Vijayanagar history which rather conflicts with his former account. He states that, at the death of "Secrety," the latter's son, a minor, succeeded, but, dying shortly after, was succeeded by his younger brother. He too died, and, the rightful sovereign being an infant only three months' old, Heemraaje, one of the ministers, became regent, " and was cheer"fully obeyed by all the nobility and vassals of the kingdom for forty years; though, on the arrival of the "young king at the age of manhood, he had poisoned him and put an infant of his family on the throne, "in order to have a pretence for keeping the regency in his own hands. Heemraaje, at his death, was "succeeded in office by his son Ramraaje, who, having married a daughter of the son of Secroy, by that "alliance greatly added to his dignity and power" (id., p. 262). Designing to raise himself to the throne by the total extirpation of the legitimate line, Rāma Rāja found himself opposed by a number of the nobles, and therefore he "placed on the throne an infant of the female line, and committed his person to "the care of his uncle, Hoje Termul Roy, who was not without a cast of insanity in his mind, and from "whose weakness he apprehended no danger of competition" (id., p. 263). Rama Raja, after five or six years, rid himself by treacherous means of the nobles who opposed him, and then reduced several rajus in Malabar. Being absent on an expedition against a raja who lived to the south of the capital, a slave in whom Rama Raja trusted seized the opportunity of liberating the young monarch, " and having "procured Hoje Termul Roy to embrace his interest, assumed the office of minister and began to levy "troops. Several tributary roies, who were disgusted with Ramranje, flew with speed to Beejanuggur to "obey their lawful king; and in a short time thirty thousand horse and vast hosts of foot were assembled under his standard at the city" (id., p. 263). Rāma Rāja at once returned, but finding resistance hopeless, retired to his own estates. The young Rāja had not long to live in peace, for he was soon strangled by "Hoje Termul," who then seized the throne. His government proving oppressive and distasteful to the nobles, they invited Rama Raja to return and take upon himself the administration of affairs (id., 264). The king, stricken with terror, made overtures to Ibrahim 'Adil Shah for assistance. promising to become tributary to Vijayapura (Bijapur). The Muhammadans accordingly took the field and marched into Vijayanagar in A.D. 1535, whereupon Rama Raja and his allies submitted, and entreated that the Muhammadans might be sent out of the capital. The king accordingly dismissed his allies, but no sooner had they crossed the Krishna than Rama Raja marched on the capital. The king in despair destroyed all that he could of the royal property and then killed himself. "Rama Raja now became Roy of Beejanuggur without a rival" (id., 265). Ibrahīm 'Adil at once despatched an army against Adoni, "which was on the point of surrender when Negtaderee (Venkatadri), the younger brother of Ramraaje, marched from Beejanuggur with a great army to relieve it." A battle ensued, and in the end a peace was concluded (id., 266). In 1543 the princes of the Muhammadan States of the Dakhan quarrelled amongst themselves, and Bijapur was simultaneously attacked by several armies, one of which was that of "Negtaderee," brother of Rama Raja. Peace was speedily concluded with Vijayanagar, and the Hindu army retired (id., 271). In 1551 an agreement was made between Rama Raja and the Nigam Shahi Musalmans, which resulted in Mudkal and Raichur being captured from Ibrahīm 'Adil. Six years later Rama Raja was called to the assistance of Ibrahīm and sent his brother Venkaṭādri with a large army to aid him. Venkaṭādri was successful (id., 284). Ibrahīm died in 1557 and was succeeded by 'Alī 'Ādil, one of whose first actions was to affect a warm friendship for. and interest in, Rāma Rāja, who had just lost a son (id, 289) In 1558 these two monarchs, now allied, fought against the armies of Husain Nizām Shāh, in which expedition the Muhammadan historian accuses the Hindu soldiers of being guilty of gross barbarities and excesses (id., 291). Rama Raja then insulted the Musalman sovereigns by his arrogance and haughtiness, and the result was the grand Muhammadan league which overthrew utterly the power of Vijayanagar. In 1564 the four princes met on the plains of Bijapur and marched to Talikōta on the Krishna. Rāma Rāja sent his "youngest brother Eeltumraaje" to block the passages of the river, while he himself, preceded by an army under his brother Venkatadri, marched to the attack of the allies. Ferishta gives a graphic description of the battle (id., p. 295—298). The Hindus were utterly defeated, Rāma Rāja was captured by the soldiers of Nizām Shāh, who promptly decapitated him; and the Muhammadans, entering Vijayanagar in triamph, "razed the chief buildings, and committed all manner of excess" "The "raaje of Beejanuggur since this battle has never recovered its ancient splendour, and the city itself "has been so destroyed that it is now totally in ruins and uninhabited" (i.e., in A.D. 1593-1606, the period of the composition of Ferishta's History).

Leaving Ferishta, we will now revert to the inscriptional evidence as to the chief kings of the Narasimha dynasty down to the destruction of the kingdom. A number of inscriptions combine to give the following genealogy :-

Timma. married Devakt. Īsvara, married Bukkamma.

Narasa, Narasa Avanipāla, Narasimha, or Nrisitha. (A.D.?—1509). Married Tippäyidevi, and Nagalädevi, or Nagambikā (? a dancing girl).

(By Tippājideri) Vira Narasimha or Vira Nrisimhendra (A.D. 1509).

(By Nagaladeri) Krishnadeva Rāya or "Vīra Nara-simha Krishnadeva Mahārāya," (1509 - 1530)

Married Chinnadevi and Tirumaladevi. One of these was daughter of the King of

(By Chinnadeci). A daughter-married Tirumala Raya.

(By Tirumaladevi), Tirumalāmbā (?) - married "Aliya" Rama Raya.

An inscription, noted as No. 107 of my List of Copper-plate Grants (supra, p. 16), states that Krishna's successor, Achyuta, was younger brother of Krishna, while that noted similarly as No. 207 (id., p. 30) gives this relationship still more clearly and minutely. It relates that Krishna's father, Narasa, besides his wife, Tippajidevi, and Nagala, the mother of Krishna, had a wife Obambika, and that to each of the ladies was born a son, Achyuta being son of Obambika. On the other hand, the two inscriptions noted as Nos. 25 and 26 of the same list (id., pp. 4, 5), both from the same place, Pandi in North Arcot, state that Achyuta, or Achyutendra, was son of Krishnadeva. Achyuta reigned from A.D. 1530-1542.

The relationship of Achyuta's successor, Sadasiva, who succeeded as an infant in 1512 and was kept entirely under the control of his ministers, is equally doubtful with that of Achyuta. An inscription of A.D. 1532 at Conjeeveram (Vol. I, p. 182, No. 115) mentions that Achyuta had a wife named Varadadevi, and a son Venkatadri, while a copper-plate grant from the banks of the Krishna (No. 81 of my list above, p. 12) mentions the name of Achyuta's son as Venkatadeva, and states that he reigned a short time and died deeply regretted, being succeeded by a relative named Sadāšiva, who was son of Rangaraya and his wife Timmamba. But the inscription at Hassan, of which Mr. Rice gives a translation in his Mysore Inscriptions (p. 228, No. 129) states (as far as I gather) that Sadaśiva was son of Achyuta.

No doubt the further study of inscriptions will make these matters all more clear. At present it is useless to theorize.

One thing, however, must be noticed. Whether it arises from oral tradition, or from the number of inscriptions and grants made to temples in his reign, it is a fact that the name of Krishnadeva Raya is held by all natives of the peninsula to this day as that of one of the greatest monarchs that ever ruled the country; whereas Muhammadan writers absolutely ignore him and his successors, and declare that the ministers usurped the entire sovereignty, keeping the Rayas in absolute subjection. This apparent discrepancy needs solution. One fact only I am able to assert positively; -- if the ministers were so powerful, as stated by the Musalman historians, at least in all inscriptions that I have met with their sovereigns were recognized as paramount and the names of Rama Raja, Rangaraja and the others never appear as those of supreme rulers.

I Called Bukka by the first of the two inscriptions under notice. Ferialita states that Isvara was Raja of Kurnool (Assatis Researches XX, 10).

This prince actually came to the throne and was succeeded by Krishnadeva Raya, according to an inscription published by Krishnadeva was crowned in A.D. 1509. He extended the conquests of the Vijayanagar family considerably. He is said to have first settled the Dravida country about Conjeeveram, and then to have crushed a refractory raja in the Maisur country, the Ganga Raja of Ummatur. In the war against the latter Krishna Raya captured the strong fort of Sivasamudram and the city of Srirangapattana (Seringapatam), after which all Maisur submitted to him.2 In A.D. 1513 he conquered the fortress and dependencies of Udayagiri in Nellore, and brought thence an image of Krishnasvāmi, which he set up at Vijayanagar and endowed.<sup>3</sup> In A.D. 1515 he conquered the hill fort of Kondavidu south of the Krishna from a Gajapati ruler who then held possession, Timma Arasu being the general commanding the victorious army. By this conquest, which followed the capture of fortresses further south,3 the whole country along the east coast of the peninsula was reduced to subjection. In the following year (A.D. 1516) he defeated a hostile army north of the Krishna.5 In 1529 Krishnadeva endowed the great statue of Narasimha, which forms so prominent a feature of the rock-cut remains at Vijayanagar, and which was carved by a Brahman, or at his expense.

The reign of Achyuta seems to have been as remarkable for the number of gifts to Brahmans and endowments of temples as was that of his predecessor Krishna. He finally reduced the Tinnevelly country in A.D. 1532-3.

From the inscriptions examined by me, or of which information has been sent to me, I gather the following names as those of certain of the great ministers and chiefs during the reigns of Krishna, Achyuta, and Sadasiva :-

It has already been mentioned 1 how, after repeated struggles, the whole strength of the Muhammadan kingdoms of the Dakhan combined against Vijayanagar, and, in the battle of Talikota, crushed for ever its widely-extended power, reducing the members of the ruling house to the position of mere zemindars. In spite of the entire loss of power, however, the feeling of the Hindu population of the south seems to have been always loyal to their old rulers, for, even as late as the year 1793, I have seen copper-plate documents which acknowledge the representatives of the family as paramount sovereigns.

Inscriptions at Ahobilam 2 show that there at least the authority of Sadásiva was recognized up to the year 1568, three years later than the fatal battle which ruined his family. But at the same time (i.e., in 1567) we find Tirumaladeva, the second of the three usurping brothers who had kept Sadāsiva captive —the elder brother, Ramadeva, having been captured and killed at Talikota—giving a grant in his own name.3 Other grants of this Tirumala's in 1567, 1568, 1572, 1573, 1577, are to be found amongst the inscriptions noted in Volume I. He retired to Pennakonda in A.D. 1567.5 The inscription at Pennakonda in 1577 notes the name of his minister as Chinnappa Nayudu

With Sadasiva expired, or sank into obscurity, the old line of Narasimha, and the family of the usurping ministers were recognized both by Hindus and Muhammadans as rightful sovereigns. Several inscriptions appear to recognize Rama Raya as the founder of this dynasty, as they affix his name (more Indicorum) to that of the reigning sovereign or scion of the house specially requiring notice. We may therefore call the three Vijayanagar dynasties by the names of (1) the Dynasty of Harihara, (2) the Dynasty of Narasimha, (3) the Dynasty of Rama Raja. We are now concerned with the latter.

It has been stated above that the Muhammadan historians believe Rama Raja and his brotners to have been sons of "Heem" Rāja; Dr. Burnell e calls them sons of "Virappa Nayak"; an inscription at Devanhalli in Maisūr' styles him "Śrī Raṅga." Rāma Rāya married the younger of Krishnadeva Rāya's daughters, and was therefore called "Aliya" Rāma Rāja, aliya meaning son-in-law. Dr. Oppert points out that in the "Local Records," Vol. XLVII, p. 65, his wife's name is mentioned as "Tirumalāmbā." He was killed at Talikōṭa.

From Mackenzie's "View of the Principal Political Events that occurred in the Carnatic, from the dissolution of the Ancient Hindu Government in 1564 till the Mogul Government was established in 1687" we gather some valuable information; but it must be confessed that all is, at present, singularly confused, the different lists varying in most important particulars. From the inscriptions which I have examined, or of which I have received information (if the dates given are reliable) it would seem that Rama's brother Tirumala, and the latter's son, Śrī Ranga, ruled from 1567 till A.D. 1585, or for twenty years after the battle of Talikōṭa. The inscriptions tabulated above (p. 137) give Tirumala in 1567, Ranga 1572, Tirumala 1573, Ranga 1574, Tirumala 1577, and then Ranga 1578—1585. 'The "Traditional List" published by Ravenshaw (Asiatic Researches XX, 1) and repeated in Mr. Kelsall's Bellary Manual, gives us Tirumala (1564—1572), Ranga (1572—1586), and the list tabulated by Ravenshaw from inscriptions gives Tirumala (1560—1571) and Ranga (1574—1584). In this uncertainty we can only be sure that Tirumala became head of the family after Talikōṭa, that he removed the seat of government to Pennakoṇḍa after the sack of the capital, and that he was succeeded at Pennakoṇḍa by his eldest son Śrī Ranga I.

Some writers have definitely fixed the accession of Sri Ranga at the year A.D. 1574. We learn a little more, however, from other sources. After the battle which decided the fate of the Hindu monarchy, the allies marched as far as Vijayanagar and Ānēgundi. They plundered the capital, committing all sorts of excess, and only retired on receiving the cession of all the lands north of the Tungabhadra which had been captured by the Hindus. The acknowledged head of the family was then Venkata, Rama Raja's youngest brother, Timma being for the time busted. This state of things did not, however, last for very long. Almost immediately after the Dakhani allies had broken up their joint camp at Raichur, where they fixed their rendezvous after their victorious campaign, Husain Nizam Shah of Ahmadnagar died, and was succeeded by a minor. This event encouraged 'Alī Ādil Shah of Bijapur to attempt largely to add to his dominions. Timma Raja applied to him for aid in order that he might regain his position as chief of the family—a position which Venkata had usurped—and 'Alī Ādil moved with an army to Ānēgundi ostensībly to his aid, but in reality with the view of adding, first Ānēgundi, and afterwards Vijayanagar itself, to his own dominions. This design was frustrated by Venkata calling on the other Dakhānī sovereignties to aid him to maintain his position, and 'Alī Ādil was forced by fear of his rivals to retreat back from Ānēgundi.

In 1577 the Muhammadans advanced against Pennakonda, which was so bravely defended by Jagadeva Raya, son-in-law of Sri Ranga, that the invaders were defeated and driven back. Jagadeva was rewarded by large grants of land added to the territories of the province (parts of Maisur and Salem) that he governed. His governorship was then widely extended.

Sri Ranga was succeeded in A.D. 1585 by his brother, Venkatapati, who removed the seat of government to Chandragiri. Venkatapati ruled with some degree of magnificence at Chandragiri and Vellore, having his territories governed by viceroys. Mackenzie gives the names of some of the principal viceroys and their provinces about the year A.D. 1597. They seem to have been—

Krishnappa Nāyakka ... at Jiñji (Gingee). Nayakka ... at Tanjore. Kumāra Krishņappa Nāyakka ... at Madura. ... Jagadeva Rāya ... ... *** ... at Chennapattana. Tirumala Raya at Srirangapattana. ... 4341 at Pennakonda. 2.00

About the year 1593 or 1595 he seems to have roused himself to make an effort for the recovery of at least part of his patrimony from the Musalmans. "Taking advantage of the attention of the Gol"konda Government being taken up by the invasion of Ahmadnagar by the Mogul forces under Prince
"Murad, son of Akbar, he approached the limits of Guntur with a view of recovering that province; but "speedily retreated on finding the Golkonda officers were disposed to receive him in force, and apologized, "alleging that his movement was from motives of religion" to visit and perform ablations "at the great
"tank at Cummam." In 1599 Venkatapati was at war with the Nayakka of Madura, his vassal. The European missionaries were well received by the sovereign at Chandragiri, and he encouraged the trade of the East India Company. The Dutch were then established at Pulicat, where they had recently built a fort. He died in A.D. 1614. Floris, the traveller, heard of his death while at Masulipatam, on October 25th of that year. He states that the king's three wives burned themselves on his funeral pyre. One of them was "Obiama, Queen of Paleakate," or Pulicat.

His death was followed by great confusion and disturbance. The various viceroys throughout the south of India began to assume an independent attitude and emancipate themselves from their position of vassaldom. The government of the Vijayanagar territories above the ghats was virtually destroyed by the capture of Srīrangapattana (Seringapatam) in 1609 A.D. by Raja Udaiyar of Maisur from Tirumala Raja, the aged vicercy, who retired and died at Talkad. And all over the country the Polegars began to sequire more and more power.

Sri Ranga, however, certainly began to reign before the year 1639, for it was he that gave the site of the city of Madras to the English in that year.

In a letter to Government, dated 12th July 1801, Munro gave an account of the Anegundi Raj so far as he had been able to gather it. He states that the then Raja was a descendant of the Vijayanagar family by the female line, his ancestors having obtained the territories of Anegundi, part of Harpanahalli, and part of Chitaldurgam in jaghir from the Muhammadan Governments. Early in the eighteenth century they paid a tribute of Rs. 20,000 to the Mogul Emperor. In A.D. 1749 the jaghir fell under the Mahrattas and paid tribute to them till 1775, when it was reduced by Haidar 'Ali, who fixed the tribute at Rs. 10,000 and the obligation of furnishing a force of 1,000 foot and 100 horse. In 1786 Tipa completely subverted the jaghir. The Raja fled to the Nizam's dominions, where he remained a fugitive till 1791, when he tried to regain his jaghir during the war. In 1799 he seized Anagundi on Tipa's fall, and refused to submit to the English. This he was compelled to do, and the estate was handed. over to the Nizam, when the Raja was made a pensioner. His name was Tirumala Raja. He died in 1824.

From him the present Raja of Anegundi is descended, as shown by the following pedigree:-

YADAVAS OF DEVAGIRL

(See Mr. Fleet's Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, pp. 71-78, for an account of this family. From it the following summary is compiled.)

On the downfall of the Kalachuris, the southern parts of their dominions fell into the hands of the Hoysala Ballalas, or Yadavas of Dyarasamudra, while the northern were appropriated by another family of Yadavas, who eventually settled at Devagiri (hod. Daulatabad.) The device of their house was a golden garada. The following is the genealogy of the dynasty :-

Singhana I. Mallugi. Bhillama (A.D. 1187 to 1191). Jaitugi I. Jaitrasimha, or Jaitrapala, (A.D. 1191-1209.) Simha, Simhala, Simhana, or Tribhuvanamalla, (A.D. 1209-1247.) Jaitugi II. Krishna, Mahādeva Kanhara, Kanhara, Kandolias Uragasārvabhauma, hara, or Kandhara, (A.D. (A.D. 1260-1271). 1247 - 1260).Amana. Rämnehandra, or Ramadeva, (A.D. 1271-1309). Bhima. Samkara, A daughter, (A.D. 1309-1312). married to Haripala.

Singhana I is stated in an inscription to have subdued the "King of the Karnataka," whom Mr. Fleet identifies with the Hoysala king Vishnuvardhana.

In Bhillama's lifetime, his son Jaitugi seems to have been defeated by the Hoysala king Ballala II in a battle fought, according to tradition, at Lakkundi in the Dharvad District.

Jaitugi I resided at Vijayapura or Bijapur. He is stated in a later inscription to have slain the "King of Trikalinga" and seized his kingdom. Whether this is true or not remains to be proved. The king of "Trikalinga" would, apparently, be the Chola sovereign, or his vicercy in his northern possessions. Kulottunga II appears to have reigned over the Chola country till after the year A.D. 1158; and I have received copies of inscriptions about the Krishna and Godavari rivers which would give us a Chola prince named Rajendra reigning till at least 1194; after which we hear nothing of any sovereign till the Ganapatis of Orangal appear on the scene, the country being apparently in the hands of a number of petty chiefs. It is therefore not at all improbable that the Chola sovereign or viceroy of Telingana (Trikalinga) was conquered by a Yadava sovereign between the years 1191 and 1209, the date of Jaitugi's reign.

It is in the reign of Singhana II, viz., in the year A.D. 1210-11, that Devagiri is first mentioned as the capital. He claims to have conquered the "King of Telunga" (Telingana), the Kalachuri king, and the Andhra king. Thirty-eight inscriptions of his reign are extant, which prove that the kingdom had extended in size.

Singhana II was succeeded by his grandson Krishna, whose viceroy (Mahapradhāna) in the southern provinces was the son of a general who is declared to have conquered the Raltas, the Kadambas of the Konkana, the Pandya who shone at Gutti," (?) and the Hoysala king, and to have set up pillars of victory near the Kaveri.

Mahadeva was possibly a usurper. His son Amana seems to have been forcibly ousted by Ramachandra, who succeeded in A.D. 1271.

Either Ramachandra or one of his vassals prosecuted a war against the Hoysalas which seems to have been successful. Ramachandra's sway " extended over all the dominions, in the central and southern parfs of the Bombay Presidency, of the dynastics that preceded his." In A.D. 1294 he was attacked by a predatory band of Muhammadan horsemen under 'Ala-ud-din Khilji, nephew of Jalal-ud-din, their first inroad into the Dakhan,-was defeated and driven into his fort, the town being pillaged by the marauders. Ramachandra bought off the invaders and concluded a peace, but meanwhile his son Sankara advanced with a large army to the capital. In the battle which ensued the Muhammadans were ultimately victorious, and the Hindu sovereign had to make further concessions before the invaders would retire.

In 1306 A.D. Ramachandra having refused tribute, 'Ala-ud-din, who, by the murder of his uncle, was now on the throne of Delhi, sent one of his eunuchs, Malik Kafur, with 100,000 horse, to subdue the Dakhan. Devagiri was defenceless against this host, and Ramachandra submitted and was sent to Delhi, where he was received honorably and liberally. He was restored, and continued to pay tribute till his death. In 1309 he hospitably entertained Malik Kafur on his march against Orangal.

In 1310 A.D. Malik Kafur again marched south, this time against the Hoysalas, and returned to Delhi. Sankara, then sovereign of Devagiri, refused tribute, and in 1312 Malik Kafur again marched into the Dakhan, seized Sankara and put him to death. He ravaged the Dakhan, and took up his residence at Devagiri. Being summoned soon after to Delhi, Ramachandra's son-in-law, Haripala, stirred up the Dakhan to arms, expelled a number of the Muhammadan garrisons, and asserted his power over the former territories of Devagiri.

In 1318 Mubarak, then on the throne of Delhi, marched in person against Haripala, who was captured, flayed alive, and decapitated, and his head set up over the gate of his own city.

Thus ended the Yadava dynasty.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES.

BANA KINGS, THE ...

The publication of Mr. Le Fanu's Manual of the Salem District with Mr. Foulkes's Historical Paper in Vol. I, and his exhaustive notes on inscriptions in the Appendix to Vol. II, enables me to make some additions to the above sketch of the dynasties of Southern India.

I had omitted to notice the Bana Kings of Maisur. This was a very ancient dynasty and apparently ruled over the eastern portion of Maisur. (Op. cit. II, 395, etc.)
At an early date, in the reign of the Ganga King Kongani I (see p. 190), the Bana kings were conquered, but they subsequently recovered their power and prestige. They were conquered again by a chief in the reign of Prithivi Kongani, prior to the year A.D. 777.

Mr. Foulkes's inscription (id., p. 369) gives us a certain chief named Hasti Malla, king of the Banas, who was subject to the Ganga Kings of Maisūr, who in turn were feudatories of the Cholas. The Ganga Prince Kesari "Prithivipati" consecrated Hasti Malla, of Padivipuri, king of the Banas by permission of the Chola "Parakesari." A short time previous to this the Banas were conquered "suddenly" (id., p. 372, Ins., verse 9) by the Chola Vira Narayana, and since the inscription in question bears an endorsement in the fifteenth year of the said Vira Narayana, it would appear that this conquest, followed by the giving back of the kingdom and consecration of the Bana king, took place within the first fifteen years of his reign, and therefore that "Parakesari" or "Koppara Kesari" was a title of this Vira Narayana Chola. In the endorsement the latter is mentioned by the title of "he who took

In another grant the same Bana chief, Hasti Malla, is represented as having captured a Pallava fort, and being in consequence highly honored by the Chola sovereign and the Ganga King Prithivipati. Mr. Foulkes argues (id., p. 388), and I think rightly, that this must have taken place before the conquest of the Pallavas by the Cholas, and probably only shortly before.

Another grant published in the same work (id., 391) gives us the following table of eight kings. Bana was the first sovereign. A long time after him came Banadhiraja. Again a long time after him came Jayanandivarma, who ruled as far as the "Andhra country," i.e., the Telugu country.

Jayanandivarma. Vijayaditya. Sri Malladeva, alias "Jagadekamalla." Bana Vidyadhara. Prabhumerudeva. Vikramāditya. Vijayāditya, alias "Pukagavippava Gauda." Vikramāditya, olias "Vijaya Bāhu."

The last is called the "friend of Krishna Rāja." Another Bāṇa king is mentioned in inscriptions at Gulganpode in the Kolar District of Maisur, 15 miles north of Kolar (Mysore Inscriptions, pp. lvi, 304, 305), viz., the "Srī Mahāvali Bāṇarasa," Vikramāditya, surnamed "Bāṇa Vidyādhara."

Reference to the sketch of the rulers of the Malayālam country given above (p. 196) will show that one of the early Perumals was Bana Perumal "from Banapuram in Paradesa."

Inscription at Nagamangalam (Rice's Myeore Inscriptions, p. 287).

CHALUKYAS.

Mr. Fleet (Ind. Ant. XII, 218, 220) mentions an Eastern Chalukyan inscription from the Krishna, which states that King Vijayaditya Narendra Mrigaraja fought 108 battles in twelve years with the Rashtrakūta feudatories, the Ganga Mahāmandaleśvaras and the Rattas; that Gunaganka-Vijayaditya was successful in the war with the same opponents; but that, after his reign, Vengi was overrun and crushed by the "Ratta claimants,"-for the time, of course.

CHOLAS.

Mr. Foulkes (Manual of the Salem District II, 369) publishes a grant which gives a genealogy of three Chola sovereigns, which seems to correspond with a set of three mentioned in the Kongudesa Rájákkal.

> Kongudesa Rājākkal. Mr. Foulkes's Grant. Vijayalaya. Vijayada. Aditya. Vira Chola Narayana. Vīra Nārāyana.

We learn that previous to these there had reigned a "Karikala Chola," since the grant states (v. 4) that "in his line, which the fame of Kokkilli Chola Karikala rendered illustrious, and which was the the King of Kerala, and to have conquered (1) the Bana kings, (2) King Tumba and other kings, (3) Raja Simha Pandiyan, (4) the King of Ceylon. He assumed the title of "Sangrams Raghava."

Mr. Foulkes (id., p. 367) thinks that the Chola Adityavarma, who conquered the Kongudesa about the year A.D. 894 according to his computation, and who had a son Vira, is the same as the Chola Parakesari, who seems to have had a son Vira; but the whole history of the Cholas is, at present, so confused that it is, as Mr. Foulkes remarks, dangerous to theorize.

The Kongu chronicle mentions a Chola "Arivarideva," or "Harivarideva," alias Rajaraja, as greatgrandson of Vira Narayana. On page 380 of the same publication Mr. Foulkes gives us a list of seven Cholas and the dates he assigns to them. But as a great deal of his reasoning seems to be based on the Kongu chronicle, neither the dates nor names can be trusted.

								A.D.
Vijayālaya	1000	44.0	* 	11.		444		855-880

One thing is quite clear, that if the Vîra Nărāyaṇa of this list be the same as Rājendra Kulottunga

Chola, the date must be wrong.

Another list has kindly been given to me by Dr. Burgess, who got it from Dr. Burnell. This also is from a chronicle, the Brihadiseara Mahātmya, or legend of the great temple at Tanjore. Dr. Burnell had no confidence in it, though he thought that some of the names were doubtless real ones. It will be observed that the list does not at all correspond with the lists drawn from inscriptions.

GANGAS OF MAISUR.

In a grant published by Mr. Foulkes in Mr. Le Fanu's Manual of the Salem District (Vol. II, p. 372) is a short Ganga genealogy. In the royal line was born Siva Mara, who had a son named Prithu-yasha alias Prithivipati. He saved a certain Dindikojeriga from Amoghavarsha. [The first of these latter names sounds like a Pallava name. Amoghavarsha was probably one of the three Rashtrakūta kings of that name (see above, pp. 233-4).] He also saved Nāgadanda (another Pallava?) from death. Prithu-yashā seems to have lost his life in battle with the Pandiyan King Varaguna. His son was Narasinha, and the latter's son was named Keśari, alias "Prithivipati." The latter was subject to the Chola king Parakešari (or Kopparakešari?) and consecrated Hasti Malla king of the Bāṇas. The Bāṇas had been shortly before defeated by the Chola king, the same Parakešari, also called Vīra Nārāyaṇa.

KALINGA.

The kingdom of Kalingā was one of the oldest in India. Though not actually mentioned by name in the Rig Veda, the sage Kakshīvat is frequently alluded to, and he was the son of a female slave of the queen of Kalingā. The country is mentioned in all the most ancient chronicles. According to Buddhist legends, when Buddha's relies were divided at his death, Brahmadatta, the King of Kalingā, obtained his left canine tooth. Kalingā is also mentioned in the Jātakas, such as the Wessantara Jātaka and others. In the time of Aśoka (B.C. 250) the country was of sufficient importance to justify that king's engraving his celebrated rock-edicts there for the enlightenment of the people. Pliny divides the country into three portions, Kalingā, Madhya Kalingā, and Mahā Kalingā. With all this, very little is known of the names of the kings who reigned over the country, except through native chronicles, which, as before stated, are very untrustworthy.

Dr. Rajendra Lala Mitra, in his Antiquities of Orissa (Vol. II, pp. 12, etc.) gives us some Pali inscriptions in the Lat character on the caves in Orissa, which mention King Vira (or Vera, according to the Pali letters as they appear in print), Prince Vidhuka and King Aira, who seems to have defeated a king of Kalinga named Nanda, and seized his kingdom. The author thinks that this Nanda is either "Sunanda, son and successor of Kasi, and grandson of Brahmadatta" above alluded to, or one of the nine Nandas of Magadha. Aira's date is the fourth century B.C.

Mr. W. Taylor, now residing at Parlakimedi in Ganjam, has sent me a newly discovered copperplate inscription of Indravarma, King of Kalinga, found at Kimedi. It is on three small plates, and dates apparently from about the eighth or ninth century. Two other inscriptions of this king are known (see above, page 183), dated respectively in the 128th and 146th year of the "victorious reign" of the dynasty. This is similarly dated in the 91st year, proving either that Indravarma enjoyed a very long reign, or that there was more than one king of that name.

MAISUR.

Mr. Foulkes (Manual of the Salem District, II, 403—430) has published a grant of Dodda Krishna Raja (A.D. 1714—1731), and has printed (pp. 426—430) several genealogies of this royal house from different sources. My table (above, p. 194) is defective, but it is at least as reliable as any other, seeing that seven different tables compiled by Mr. Foulkes from different sources vary in important details.

RASHTRAKUTA KINGS.

Mr. Fleet has just published a number of new grants in Ind. Ant. XII, 215, from which we gain the following principal particulars:—

(11.) Amoghavarsha I was surnamed "Atišayadhavala" and "Nripatunga I." He defeated the Chalukyas, and built (restored?) the city of Manyakheta. He came to the throne in A.D. 814-15 or 815-16, and enjoyed a long reign.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mr. Foulkes points out that Kamban, the great Tamil poet, is said to have lived in the reign of Varaguou Paodiyan, while "local tradition" makes Kamban also a contemporary of Rajemira Kulottunga Chola. This would help in the identification of Vira Narayana with Rajendra Kulottunga Chola were it not that so much confusion exists in regard to all these dates and names. Patient working will probably throw light on all this before very long.

An Eastern Chalukyan inscription from the Krishna states that a long war took place in the time of Vijayaditya Narendra Mrigaraja of that dynasty with the Gangas and Rattas. These Gangas were feudatories of the Rashtrakutas. 108 battles were fought in twelve years.

(12.) Krishna II was also called "Kannara," "Kandhara-Vallabha," and "Krishna-Vallabha." His wife was of the family of the Kalachuris of Tewar or Tripura.

The Eastern Chalukyan inscription mentioned above states that the wars between that dynasty and the Rashtrakutas continued into the reign of Krishna II. Gunaganka-Vijayaditya was successful in his wars, but after him "the province of Vengi was overrun by the army of the Ratta claimants, as if by dense darkness on the setting of the sun."

(13.) Jagattunga II. Mr. Fleet has ascertained (p. 222, note 47) that the name "Jagadrudra" might be expunged both from this king's names and those of his great grandfather Govinda III.

The title "Jagadrudra" is due only to a mistake in reading an inscription. Jagattunga II gave a grant in A.D. 929-30 under the title of "Prabhatavarsha," His son, (14.) Indra IV, gave a grant in A.D. 916-17.

Mr. Fleet (Ind. Ant. XII, 248) mentions two royal insignia, which it seems were formerly adopted by the Guptas, acquired from them by the Chalukyas, and wrested from the Chalukyas by the Rashtra-kūṭas. These are the figures of the rivers Gaṅgā and Yamunā.

Govinda V is called "Gojjigadeva," "Nripatuṅga," "Vīra Narāyaṇa," and "Raṭṭa-Kandarpa" in an inscription at Kalas in Dhārvāḍ. (i.d., p. 249). An army of his was defeated by Rāja Bhīma of the Eastern Chālukyas.

VIJAYANAGAR.

On page 436 of the Chingleput District Manual, Mr. Crole has printed a translation of an inscription in the Varadarājāsvāmi temple at Conjeeveram, which gives some interesting details of Krishnadeva Raya's conquests (see above, p. 249) and of his visit to Conjeeveram after his return. He is described as capturing, first, the hill forts of Udayagiri, Bellamkonda, Vinukonda, Kondavidu and others, from Nellore up to the Krishna river, subduing some chiefs whose names are given; then Bezvada, Kondapalle, and many places north of the river; and finally Rajahmundry, north of the Godavari, where "the youngest of his wives, Tirumaladevi, was caused to make many gifts. In A.D. 1516 he went and worshipped at Conjeeveram and gave gifts."

It is interesting to notice that this inscription confirms the Kondavidu chronicle (see above, p. 188) that the Gajapatis of Orissa had possession of that fortress in those days, and that the last of them, Virabhadra, son of Pratapa Rudra Gajapati, was conquered by Krishnadeva Raya in A. D. 1515.
